

Sudan preparing peace formula

KHARTOUM (R) — Sudanese Prime Minister Sadeq Al Mahdi said Saturday his government was preparing a new declaration on how to settle the three-year-old civil war in southern Sudan. Mr. Mahdi, quoted by the Sudan News Agency (SUNA), also said his government, troubled by the war and an acute economic crisis, was ahead with plans to convene a long-delayed conference to produce a new constitution. Speaking to leaders of political parties, Mr. Mahdi said the problem facing his government was how to deal with what he called the "armed movement in Ethiopia," a reference to the Addis Ababa-backed rebel Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA). He said the new peace formula would take into account contacts with the SPLA, led by Colonel John Garang, before the shooting down last August of a Sudanese airliner by the rebels. All 60 people on board were killed. Mr. Mahdi and Col. Garang, once allied against the role of now ousted President Isiah Numeini, held inconclusive talks in Ethiopia some three weeks before the plane was downed. After the incident, Mr. Mahdi broke contact with the SPLA and described it as a terrorist organisation controlled by foreign powers.

Jordan Times

An independent Arab political daily published by the Jordanian Press Syndicate Foundation
 جوردان تايمز مؤسسة الصحافة الأردنية والرأي

U.S. to sell helicopters to S. Arabia

WASHINGTON (R) — The Reagan administration plans to sell helicopters and electronic equipment for jet fighters for more than $400 million to Saudi Arabia, Pentagon officials said Saturday. Officials confirmed published reports the administration will officially notify Congress later this month of the offer to sell a dozen large troop transport helicopters, other smaller helicopters and electronic counter-measures equipment for Saudi Arabian F-15 fighter jets. The sale would become official 30 days after the notification unless Congress vetoed it. Army Lieutenant Colonel Bill Birdseye, a Pentagon spokesman, said congressional committees were unofficially apprised of the sale last week, but declined to give specifics. Such unofficial notification is normally made 20 days before Congress receives official notice of planned large military sales. Other defence officials, who asked not to be identified, confirmed published reports in the Baltimore Sun and in Defence News, a private military publication, that the package would total over $400 million. The report said the sale would include 12 UH-60 "Blackhawk" troop transport helicopters, 15 smaller Bell 406 helicopters.

Volume 12 Number 3418

AMMAN, SUNDAY, MARCH 8, 1987, RAJAB 8 1407

Price: Jordan 100 fils; Syria 1 pound; Lebanon 1 pound; Saudi Arabia 1.50 riyals; UAE 1.50 dirhams; Great Britain 25 pence

Dudin meets Spanish Red Cross president

AMMAN (J.T.) — Minister of Occupied Territories Affairs Marwan Dudin conferred in his office Saturday with Mr. Leopoldo Marin, president of the Spanish Red Cross Society, who is on a visit to Jordan. During the meeting Mr. Dudin spoke on Israel's arbitrary measures against the Arab inhabitants in the occupied Arab territories. These actions, he said, constitute a flagrant violation of human rights law and the Geneva Convention. Mr. Dudin also spoke on Israel's inhuman treatment of Arab detainees in Israeli jails and Israel's obstruction of Red Cross operations in the occupied West Bank. Mr. Marin arrived in Amman Thursday after attending an International Red Cross and Red Crescent meeting in Doha, Qatar.

JPA candidates hold debate

AMMAN (J.T.) — The Jordanian Writers' Association (JWA) held a dialogue on Saturday between the two candidates running for the presidency of the Jordan Press Association (JPA). The elections will take place Friday. Both nominees Ibrahim Saklha and Rakan Al Majali, the only contenders for the post, reviewed the associations' activities since the mid-70s, and outlined their election programmes. Later, both men replied to queries raised by more than 100 journalists who gathered at the Professional Associations Complex.

Village calls for amnesty for Abdallah

KABBAYAT, Lebanon (R) — Georges Ibrahim Abdallah's home village on Saturday appealed for France to give the jailed Lebanese an amnesty because it said the French secret service had interfered in his defence. ("Village" leaders were surprised that the first lawyer who was supposed to defend Georges Abdallah was an agent of the secret service," Kabbayat priest Nabil Zourabli said. "The lawyer took to French police information that he got from Georges and added charges that had not originally been included," Mr. Zourabli said. Mr. Zourabli was referring to Jean-Paul Marzuri, Abdallah's lawyer after he was arrested in France in 1984. Mr. Marzuri told French television Friday night he had shown messages from Abdallah to his followers to the French secret police. Spokesmen for the remote Maronite Christian village, 150 kilometres northeast of Beirut, told reporters they had asked humanitarian organisations, Arab leaders and Syrian President Hafez Al Assad to intercede with France on Abdallah's behalf.

Kuwait to hold naval exercises

KUWAIT (R) — Kuwait announced plans on Saturday for naval exercises in the northern Gulf. A Defence Ministry statement, quoted by the Kuwait News Agency (KUNA), said gunboats would exercise with live rounds in the next two days off the so-called divided zone between Kuwait and Saudi Arabia. The area is some 100 miles south of the Gulf borders of Iran and Iraq.

INSIDE

- Senate committee may force Iran testimony, page 2
- UNESCO offices opened in Amman, page 3
- Are we over- or under-taxed? page 4
- Eurotunnel vision marks modest occasion, page 5
- Liverpool takes league lead, page 6
- Oil prices go over $18 a barrel, page 7
- Indian police enter Golden Temple to rescue injured colleagues, page 8

Iraq says new Iranian assault foiled near Basra

2 divisions of Revolutionary Guards said destroyed; Tehran reports fighting in north

BAHRAIN (Agencies) — Iraq said on Saturday its forces, backed by fighter-bombers, helicopter gunships and fierce artillery barrages, repulsed an attack by two divisions of Iranian soldiers in heavy fighting near the southern city of Basra.

A military spokesman said Iraqi defenders wiped out the Iranian force, made up of Revolutionary Guards, in nearly 12 hours of fighting.

"Iraqi forces used thousands of rounds of artillery, tank and mortar shells, in addition to jet fighters and helicopter gunships... to thwart the Iranian offensive and turn enemy positions, weapons and tanks into rubble," spokesman reported.

He said three U.S.-made Iranian Cobra gunships were shot down by ground fire in fighting late Friday.

The spokesman also said President Saddam Hussein on Friday presided over a meeting of the ruling Revolutionary Command Council and Baath Party leadership which studied the war situation, including the aftermath of Iraq's decision to stop bombing Iranian population centres.

He repeated Iraqi charges that Iran had violated conditions set by Baghdad for stopping the air attacks and said Tehran would have to bear responsibility for such action.

The Iraqi News Agency also announced that Iraqi warplanes attacked a "large naval target," which usually means a tanker carrying Iranian oil, in the northern reaches of the Gulf on Saturday, "scoring an accurate and effective hit."

Iran's Islamic Republic News Agency (IRNA) said Saturday Iranian troops, fighting in bitter cold, repulsed an Iraqi bid to dislodge them from "newly-won positions" on the Gulf war's northern front.

IRNA said the Iraqis tried to counter-attack in snow-clad peaks of the Haj Omran region, where Iran launched an offensive last Tuesday.

Tehran Radin quoted a military commander as saying the battle was fought in temperatures below minus 15 Centigrade (five degrees Fahrenheit).

Baghdad communiques carried no reference to fighting in the north.

The fighting in the northern and southern sectors of the 1,180-kilometre battlefield heightened speculation that the Iraqis were intensifying pressure on the Iraqis to stretch their defences.

Western military analysts said they expect further Iranian assaults all along the battlefield in the coming weeks.

Western analysts doubt that the Iraqis, despite recent injections of new hardware, have the firepower to match the Iraqis or make any sizeable breakthrough.

Gemayel hails Assad's peace efforts as a big step forward

DAMASCUS (AP) — Lebanese President Amin Gemayel on Saturday hailed Syrian President Hafez Al Assad's efforts to pacify Lebanon as a "big step forward" in moves to end nearly 12 years of civil war and factional bloodletting.

Mr. Gemayel made the remark in a message sent to Mr. Assad on the eve of the 24th anniversary of the Baath Socialist Party's rise to power in Syria.

Mr. Gemayel made no specific reference to Syrian military intervention in Lebanon Feb. 22, when Mr. Assad sent 7,500 troops with 100 tanks to west Beirut to end a week of fierce street battles between rival militias.

But Mr. Gemayel's message, the first congratulatory cable Mr. Assad has received from any head of state to mark the anniversary, was seen by officials in Damascus as tacit approval of the Syrian intervention.

"I am thrilled that the anniversary comes at a time when Lebanon, with Your Excellency's help and backing, is taking a big step forward in a march towards peace and stability and an end to its agony," Mr. Gemayel's message read.

He stressed that he and the Lebanese were "keen on establishing the best fraternal, neighbourly and amicable relations between our two countries."

It added: "We are looking forward to a national reconciliation with your backing that will guarantee equal rights and justice to all Lebanese based on merit and equal opportunity."

It was the first reported formal contact between Mr. Gemayel and Mr. Assad since the Syrian forces rumbled into west Beirut to restore law and order after three years of chaotic militia rule of the capital's mainly Muslim sector.

It also marked a sharp public change of attitude by Mr. Gemayel, who initially had branded the Syrian intervention "unconstitutional" because he had not been consulted.

Syria sent in troops after Lebanese Muslim leaders, including Prime Minister Rashid Karami, appealed for Syrian help to end the bloodletting in which 300 people were killed and 1,300 wounded.

Mr. Gemayel, seeking to end a year-long feud with Mr. Assad, last week sent his closest advisers, including former Foreign Minister Elie Salem and military intelligence chief Simon Kassis, to Damascus to discuss a Syrian peace plan to end Lebanon's turmoil.

The envoys returned to Beirut earlier Saturday after three rounds of talks with Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk Al Sharaa to report to Mr. Gemayel.

Syrian forces have closed all militia bases in west Beirut and restored calm in the turbulent quarter after killing more than 30 gunmen the Syrians said defied orders to lay down their weapons. (Syrians continue drive, page 2)

Mr. Gemayel's message on Saturday came as the Christian leader was clearly seeking to patch things up with Mr. Assad.

The wording of his message indicated a softening of Christian opposition to giving Lebanon's Muslims a larger share of power, long the sticking point in efforts to end the sectarian bloodshed.

Lebanese sources close to the Damascus talks said Mr. Gemayel's advisers would return to the Syrian capital next week for their ninth shuttle since reconciliation efforts began two months ago.

Relations between the two presidents crumbled in January last year when Mr. Gemayel torpedoed a Syrian-brokered peace accord signed by his rivals.

Mr. Gemayel, aided by right-wing Christian allies, charged that the accord, aimed at giving Lebanon's Muslim majority an equal share of power, stripped the long dominant 1.1 million Christians of the power they have held since independence from France in 1943.

51 killed and 113 missing in English Channel ferry mishap

ZEEBRUGGE, Belgium (Agencies) — Divers plunged into icy waters Saturday hunting for 113 people still missing 18 hours after a giant British ferry capsized outside a Belgian port.

Chances of finding more survivors were "very negative," British Transport Secretary John Moore told a news conference after flying over from England.

Oliver Vann, st. governor of West Flanders province, said 51 people were confirmed dead among the 463 passengers and 80 crew. He said 379 people survived and 113 were missing.

The cause of the disaster, the worst in modern times in the busy English Channel, remained a mystery.

"There is no explanation of the cause yet," Mr. Vannest said at the news conference. He said an official investigation was launched Saturday morning.

The 7,951-tonne Herald of Free Enterprise, on its way to Dover, England, Friday night rolled over and lay semisubmerged in shallow water one kilometre outside the mouth of Zeebrugge harbour. The orange, green and white ship of the Townsend Thoresen Line lay surrounded by rescue vessels used as platforms for divers plunging in search of victims.

Mr. Vannest said no official passenger list was available, but he gave this rough breakdown of nationalities: the majority British, three or four Austrians, one Swede, four Poles, 18 Dutch and some Danes, West Germans and Italians.

As rescue workers continued their search, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher flew to the scene to see for herself.

Queen Elizabeth said she was shocked and saddened and her second son, Prince Andrew, Duke of York, also flew to Zeebrugge with his wife.

The vessel was pulling clear of the harbour when mysteriously flooded and heeled over onto its side in what was believed to be the worst cross-channel accident.

The head of Zeebrugge port authority, Fernand Traen, dismissed early reports that the ferry sank after colliding with a pier as it left the harbour. He said the side of the ship which would have made contact with the pier showed no signs of damage.

Belgian Radio said heat-seeking equipment on British military helicopters hovering over the wreck Saturday morning registered positive signs and that rescue work had resumed.

The thermal image equipment, which can detect the heat of living bodies, was sent from Britain as part of a huge international rescue operation.

But Belgian Transport Minister Herman de Croo told reporters he feared there was no chance of finding any more survivors. "We have to be pessimistic on this point," he said.

The Belgian news agency Belga, quoting naval sources, said two lorries carrying a total of 111 barrels of dangerous cyanide-based chemicals were on board the stricken ferry.

Officials were not immediately able to confirm the report.

Survivors recount ordeal, page 8

His Majesty King Hussein on Saturday meets Soviet Ambassador Mikhail Sytenko (left to right), Sudanese leader Abdul Rahman Swareddahab and UNESCO chief Amadou Mbow (Petra photos)

King meets Sytenko, Swareddahab and M'bow

AMMAN (J.T.) — His Majesty King Hussein on Saturday held talks with Soviet Ambassador Mikhail Sytenko in efforts towards convening an international conference on the Middle East.

The King also held separate meetings with Abdul Rahman Swareddahab, head of the now-dissolved Sudanese military council, and Amadou Mbow, director general of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO).

The Jordan News Agency, Petra, said the King's talks with Mr. Sytenko focused on efforts to convene an international conference on the Middle East. The King and Mr. Sytenko exchanged views on coordination of efforts for this purpose, Petra said.

The meeting, which included a working luncheon, was attended by His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hassan, Prime Minister Zaid Rifai and Armed Forces Commander-in-Chief General Sharif Zaid Ibn Shaker. On the Soviet side it was attended by Gennadi Tarasov, director of the Middle East and North Africa Department of the Soviet Foreign Ministry, and the Soviet ambassador to Jordan, Mr. Alexander Zinchuk.

Mr. Sytenko and Mr. Tarasov arrived here from Syria on Friday. Their visit is part of a trip to several Arab countries aimed at reviewing the latest situation in the Middle East.

In his meeting with the King, Field Marshal Swareddahab expressed deep appreciation and thanks for the care he was given by the King and senior civil and military officials during his stay in Jordan. The meeting was attended by Crown Prince Hassan, Petra said.

Later, the King met with Mr. Mbow. The UNESCO official thanked the King for the support which Jordan extended to the UNESCO by hosting two UNESCO regional offices in Amman, Petra said (see page 3). The meeting was attended by Crown Prince Hassan.

Odeh signs $150m loan agreement

By Salameh B. Ne'mati
 Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — Finance Minister Hanna Odeh, signing a seven-year, $150 million loan agreement, said Saturday the government was taking steps towards reviving the economy, supporting the balance of payments and expanding the private sector's role in the national economy.

In a brief speech prior to signing the loan agreement with representatives of a consortium grouping 20 Arab and international banks, Dr. Odeh said recent measures adopted by the government were aimed at following monetary policies designed to "control spending and preserving the current development and investment patterns."

He did not specify the projects for which the loan was obtained, but said that the government was concerned with maintaining "a certain level of growth."

Dr. Odeh told bankers that recent government incentives to the private sector "have begun to pay off by reducing the deficit in the balance of payments."

He said these incentives have enhanced the confidence of Jordanian expatriates in the national economy "through preserving the value of their remittances to the Kingdom."

The dual-currency $150 million loan, arranged by the Arab Bank, incorporates an advanced banking technique that allows the borrower to pay less in interest.

The Australia and New Zealand Banking Group of London will act as the currency agent for the loan which is repayable in U.S. dollars with the deutchmark as an alternate currency.

The loan's interest rate in absolute terms is based on Libor (London inter-bank offered rate), plus 1/8 of one per cent for the first 3 1/2 years and 3/4 of one per cent thereafter.

The banks offered the government a 3 1/2-year grace period from the date of signing the agreement. Central Bank of Jordan Governor Hussein Qasem also signed the agreement.

In a speech at the signing ceremony at the Amman Plaza Hotel, Arab Bank deputy chairman Khaled Shoman said the 3 1/2 of one per cent in direct cost to the government "is undoubtedly favourable," and that other expenses to be paid by participating banks "shall be borne by the currency agent."

The loan's lead managers are the Arab Bank, the Al Ahli Bank of Kuwait; the Al UBAB Banking Group; the Arab Banking Corporation; Burgan Bank S.A.K.; the Gulf International Bank B.S.C.; Manufacturers Hanover Limited and Standard Chartered Bank. Co-leading are Credit Lyonnais, Banque Nationale de Paris; Banque Indosuez/Al Bank Al Saudi Al Fransi, and Grindlays International Bank.

Jordan enters oil exploration and output sharing accord with Petrofina

By a Jordan Times Staff Writer

AMMAN — The Belgian Petrofina oil company has signed a production sharing and oil exploration agreement with Jordan. The agreement is for seven years and Petrofina will spend a total of $21 million in the process of surveying including geophysical, seismic and exploration studies and will drill three wells. The agreement was signed at the Natural Resources Authority (NRA) in Amman on Saturday.

Petrofina is the third oil firm to sign contracts for oil exploration in Jordan since last summer. The Hunt oil company and Amoco each signed seven and half year agreements with the Jordanian government to prospect for oil in the Kingdom, and Prime Minister Zaid Rifai told parliament in August that the government, encouraged by oil discoveries in some parts of the country, was holding negotiations with seven foreign companies to prospect for oil in the Kingdom.

Petrofina will be implementing exploration work being carried out by the Hunt and Amoco on the north eastern plateau of the Kingdom. The Petrofina agreement covers the basalt plateau north of Azraq, extending from Umm Al Jimal in the east to Irbid in the west, covering an area of 11,500 square kilometres. Minister of Energy and Mineral Resources Hisham Al Khatib told the Jordan News Agency, Petra after signing the contract with Petrofina's assistant general manager, Mr. Paul Dechamche.

Mr. Khatib said that the contract with the three oil firms reflect their confidence in Jordan as an investment region which enjoys economic stability and security. The three firms' operations are bound to corroborate the NRA's oil prospecting programme and enhance hopes that oil will be found in substantial quantities in the country, the minister said.

Mr. Kamal Jreisat, NRA's director general, also made a statement in Petra and said that Petrofina will conduct surveys and exploration work in an area covered by several layers of volcanic rock. He said this would have been a difficult task for NRA but not for Petrofina which possesses vast capabilities, expertise and the necessary equipment.

According to Mr. Jreisat, Petrofina has divided the seven year exploration period into three stages and plans to spend $9 million in the first three years, $6 million in the second and $6 million in the third stage. Petrofina has also paid Jordan $1 million as a contract grant and has submitted a $4 million letter of credit guaranteeing to carry out the required exploration work throughout the seven-year period, Mr. Jreisat continued.

He said that Petrofina has provided a customs guarantee of $200,000 in addition to a $50,000 annual guarantee throughout the exploration period as grant for training NRA's staff and technicians on oil prospecting operations.

The conclusion of the new contract, he said, has crowned the NRA's efforts and reflects the fact that foreign, international firms have been showing increasing interest in Jordan as an area with oil potential, hoping to find oil in commercial quantities, Mr. Jreisat added.

According to Mr. Jreisat, contracts with the three oil firms cover 30 per cent of the total area of land where oil prospecting can be done and therefore there is still room for the NRA to carry on oil exploration for tens of years.

Shultz sees movement towards missile pact

HONOLULU (Agencies) — U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz says his trip to Moscow next month will be a chance to "move the ball along" towards an agreement eliminating U.S. and Soviet medium-range nuclear missiles from Europe.

Mr. Shultz said he would discuss a wide range of arms control, bilateral and regional issues with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze on April 13-16, but the talks are not expected to produce a date for a superpower summit, he said.

One focus of the talks will be finding a new means of verifying the proposed removal of U.S. and Soviet intermediate nuclear forces (INF) from Europe, Mr. Shultz said.

Agreeing on a means to verify compliance with an INF agreement could also speed progress on talks to cut superpower arsenals of longer-range missiles, he said.

"There seems to be some prospect that we might get something worked out in the INF deal," he told reporters accompanying him Saturday back from a trip to China, South Korea and Japan.

Asked whether the Moscow talks could pave the way for a U.S.-Soviet summit, Mr. Shultz said: "That's not what this activity is about."

"I think it is a good time to have this kind of meeting and see if we can't move the ball along, across the board, in our agenda."

However, he said, "under the appropriate circumstances, a summit meeting can be a great help" in reaching an agreement.

No links to Iranagate

In Jakarta, Mr. Shevardnadze denied on Saturday that a possible nuclear arms control breakthrough was linked to President Reagan's political vulnerability over the Iran arms scandal.

Mr. Shevardnadze told a news conference he would discuss a medium-range missile accord with Mr. Shultz and said progress on the treaty had nothing to do with the Iran scandal.

"There is no relationship between an agreement on medium-range missiles and Iranagate," he said in reply to a question.

"As (Soviet leader) Mikhail Gorbachev has said, we are willing to make a separate deal on (medium-range missiles). All other problems — the talks on strategic weapons and space weapons — will continue."

Mr. Gorbachev announced last week the Kremlin was willing to sign "without delay" an agreement to eliminate Soviet and American medium-range missiles in Europe within five years.

Mr. Shevardnadze, who discussed nuclear disarmament and superpower relations with Indonesian President Suharto on Saturday, confirmed the Kremlin was offering to reduce its medium-range weapons in Asia to 100 warheads if Washington did the same with medium-range missiles on "U.S. territory."

Cairo gives asylum to 2 Libyans; 3 'undecided'

CAIRO (AP) — Egypt has granted political asylum to two Libyan air force officers who flew their C-130 military transport plane to southern Egypt in quest of haven, a former Libyan prime minister said Saturday.

Abdul Hamid Bakoush, himself a political refugee in Egypt since 1978, said that the status of three Libyan enlisted men who made up the rest of the plane's crew has not been decided.

Mr. Bakoush, who headed the Libyan government in 1967 and 1968 under the late King Idris I, spoke in a telephone interview with AP.

"The Egyptian government has granted asylum to the two officers at their request," Mr. Bakoush said. "The situation regarding the three others is uncertain because they have been wavering on whether to request asylum."

He said the enlisted men's hesitation was delaying a government announcement of its decision.

Mr. Bakoush said he had seen the five men on Thursday and Friday "and I can assure you they are being very well treated. I wish I was there with them to get that kind of treatment."

He said Egyptian Defence Minister Abdul Halim Abu Ghazala had visited the Libyans three times since their arrival in Cairo last Tuesday and had lunch and breakfast with them.

Senate committee may force Iran testimony, report says

Contras acknowledge getting money from Swiss account

WASHINGTON (R) — A special Senate committee may approve within two weeks limited immunity from prosecution for key players in the Iran-contra scandal to force them to testify, the Washington Post said Saturday.

It quoted unidentified sources as saying the committee would vote on granting limited immunity to Lieutenant Colonel Oliver North, the National Security Council (NSC) aide fired for possible diversion of Iran profits to Nicaraguan rebels, and former NSC Director John Poindexter. The committee may also vote on granting limited immunity to Richard Secord, a retired major general investigator who helped Col. North provide arms to the rebels, the Post said.

All three have invoked their right not to testify on grounds of possible self-incrimination. If given limited immunity from prosecution they would be forced to testify or face possible jail terms for contempt.

Other questions possibly only they can answer include how much of $20 million in Iran arms profits went to Nicaraguan rebels and whether higher White House officials knew of the diversion.

Adolfo Calero, leader of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force (FDN), the largest rebel group, has said the FDN received $200,000 from Lake Resources, a dummy company controlled by Col. North and Gen. Secord to handle Iran arms profits.

In a separate story the Post said documents showed $1.7 million in private donations for the rebels was funnelled into Lake Resources' bank account in Switzerland and another one million went to a rebel-controlled company.

It said a report by Richard Miller, president of International Business Communications (IBC), stated it channelled money to Lake Resources at Col. North's request but said Col. North did not say how the money would be spent.

The newspaper said the report showed $1.74 million of the money raised from private contributors went to Lake Resources and $1.31 million of that was funnelled to Intel Co-operation, a Cayman Islands corporation.

It said IBC also reported another $1 million of contributions went to Alpha Services, a corporation controlled by Calero's FDN.

On Friday, former Senator John Tower, head of a presidential commission that investigated the Iran-contra connection, said he did not think there was a diversion of money from the Iran sales to the Contras in 1985.

The three shipments of U.S. weapons from Israeli stockpiles to Iran that year appear to have been "pretty straight transactions," Sen. Tower said in a telephone interview from Dallas, Texas.

He said the commission's "big problem" was that "we knew there was an intention to divert money and we knew it was diverted, but we didn't know when got it."

Contra official Bosco Matamoros said the rebels received two deposits in October, 1985, totalling nearly $200,000, from the Lake Resources account.

In another Iran-contra development Friday, White House spokesman Martin Fitzwater denied a story in Progressive magazine that said the government secretly monitored the home telephones of Robert C. McFarlane after he quit as President Ronald Reagan's national security adviser in late 1985.

Spokesmen for the House of Representatives and Senate panels investigating the Iran-contra affair said the committees had not been aware of any such monitoring but that if it was done they wanted access to the tapes.

Meanwhile, Republicans denounced a Democratic plan to pressure the Reagan government to account for past contra aid money by temporarily denying the last $40 million of $100 million Congress approved last year.

"If the Democratic leadership wants to kill off the contra by denying the funds, then I say do so in the full light of day and stop this political, partisan avoidance of the main issue," said House Republican leader Robert Michel.

Senate Republican leader Bob

Dole said, "let's not muddy this issue up with phony 'moratoriums' on aid, which are really aimed at killing the aid."

A California aircraft broker said Friday that a plane he sold to an American helping Nicaragua's contra rebels was purchased with two cashier's checks drawn on a Swiss bank that housed accounts linked to the Iran affair.

Ascher Ward, an independent broker based in Sepulveda, California, said he sold the C-123K cargo carrier to William Cooper, a pilot, in July 1986.

Cooper was killed last October when another aircraft, which he was flying over Nicaragua to drop supplies to the contra rebels, was shot down.

Ward, in a telephone interview, confirmed a newspaper report published Friday that Cooper paid for the plane with two checks drawn from the Eau-Vives branch of Credit Suisse, a commercial bank in Switzerland.

Ward said he did not know for what purpose Cooper intended the cargo plane and he didn't inquire about the method of payment. "I never gave it any thought," he said.

The checks were signed by Credit Suisse's branch manager, identified only as J. Steiger. The account number of the checks was that of the Eau-Vives branch, the news service said. There was no indication from the checks where the money came from.

Ward said the asking price for the airplane was $250,000.

Ex-Mossad chief urges inquiry over Pollard scandal

TEL AVIV (R) — Former Israeli espionage chief said Saturday he did not believe the recruitment of Jonathan Pollard, an American convicted of spying for Israel, was a rogue operation and called for a state inquiry into the affair.

Isser Harel, who headed Israel's Mossad secret service from 1952 to 1963, termed the Pollard affair "a national disaster" for Israel and said the only way to repair the damage to its relations with the United States was by a state inquiry.

"If ever there was a case that demanded a state commission of inquiry, this is it," Harel said in a radio interview.

Pollard, a former U.S. navy intelligence analyst, was sentenced to life imprisonment by a Washington court this week after he admitted he passed hundreds of top secret American documents on Soviet and Arab military capabilities to Israel.

Since Pollard and his wife Anne were arrested in November 1985, Israeli leaders have insisted his recruitment was unauthorized and vowed to cooperate with U.S. investigators. But two Israelis implicated in the affair have since been promoted.

Asked if he believed Pollard's spying was a rogue operation, Harel said: "I don't believe it. It is inconceivable to me that it was done without political guidance, one way or another. The political echelon is totally responsible for what happened."

Harel said he believed that no information Israel could have obtained from a spy in the United States was worth the damage the Pollard affair had caused to Israel's ties with Washington.

"This affair is one of the worst that has happened to the state of Israel. I see it as a national disaster... I think it will have long term effects in many areas," he said.

Syrians seize motorbikes in west Beirut clampdown

BEIRUT (R) — Syrian troops have seized at least 80 motorbikes during their security crackdown on mainly Muslim west Beirut and lined them up at checkpoints, witnesses said Saturday.

Security sources said the motorbikes were confiscated as a precaution against hit-and-run attacks or robberies which often involved motorcyclists in the past.

They said the machines would be returned to their owners at an unspecified future date with instructions on where they could be driven.

Egypt gets $115m U.S. cash grant

WASHINGTON (R) — The United States has said it was transferring $115 million in aid to Egypt as a cash grant to help boost Cairo's ailing economy.

The funds are part of $815 million in economic aid voted by Congress for 1987.

State Department spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley stressed that the transfer was not expected, and told reporters, "we simply want to point out our continued support for Egypt's reform and the efforts they are taking to reform the economy and create economic growth."

While the total funding level for 1987 has long been set, one U.S. official, who asked not to be identified, said the transfer was significant "because it's a lot of money in one shot" and will help the government of President Hosni Mubarak some needed "ready cash."

He insisted, however, that release of the funds at this time was not connected in any way to news reports that Mr. Mubarak had turned down an invitation to visit Washington.

Mr. Mubarak had been quoted as saying that he was upset about U.S. arms sales to Iran, which has brought on the worst crisis of Mr. Ronald Reagan's presidency.

The State Department has said discussions were continuing to re-establish dates for visits by Mr. Mubarak and also by King Hussein.

Mr. Mubarak was also reported to be unhappy with recent U.S. proposals for relief of Egypt's $4.5 billion military debt.

Ms. Oakley said talks on rescheduling that debt are continuing.

She said the State Department believes Egypt has taken a number of steps to reform its economy, including overhaul of the customs system, simplification of the exchange rate regime, a 25 per cent increase in gasoline prices, new revenues and budget cuts.

"The Egyptians are developing a plan for comprehensive reform which is urgently needed to address Egypt's serious economic problems and I think that our support at this time can be seen in light of those moves," she said.

Vanunu fires his lawyer

TEL AVIV (AP) — A former Israeli nuclear technician accused of treason has fired his lawyer and said he would appeal for international help, Israel Radio reported.

The radio reported that Mordechai Vanunu signed a document dismissing his lawyer Amnon Zichrony who has represented him since his abduction to Israel last September. Vanunu's brothers said they would appeal to well-known local lawyers to take over the case.

Vanunu, 32, disappeared from London a few days before the Sunday Times published a three-page spread including details and photographs of a secret Israeli underground nuclear installation. The article claimed Israel possessed the sixth largest atomic arsenal in the world.

The local ITIM news agency quoted Zichrony as saying "differences have arisen between the family and me over what line to adopt in defending Vanunu."

Israel Radio reported that Vanunu's family wanted to seek international support to secure Vanunu's freedom. Zichrony said Vanunu should trust the Israeli courts, the report said.

At a press conference earlier this week, Vanunu's brother, Meir, a law student in Boston, urged the government to open the trial which has been declared a classified proceeding. He said his brother was being denied the "basic elementary rights of a democracy."

Meir Vanunu also read out a letter written by his brother in which Mordechai Vanunu wrote he had revealed Israel's nuclear secrets for "mainly political" reasons.

Israel, which classified all information on its nuclear capacity, charged Vanunu with assisting an enemy in wartime, a reference to the state of war between Israel and most of its Arab neighbours, and aggravated espionage, which means spying with intent to harm national security. The charges carry maximum life sentence.

No official date has yet been set for the trial.

U.S. declines comment on Canada's rebuff to Israeli envoy

WASHINGTON (Agencies) — The United States refused to discuss the Canadian government's refusal to extend diplomatic accreditation to an Israeli general who is currently Israel's defence attaché in Washington.

State Department spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley said it was "a bilateral issue between Canada and Israel."

(Canadian External Affairs Minister Joe Clark said on March 5 that Canada did not consider it appropriate to accept Maj.-Gen. Amos Yaron as Israel's defence attaché in Canada. Mr. Clark did not give any specific reason, but Gen. Yaron commanded Israeli troops that controlled the area around the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps on the outskirts of Beirut in September 1982 when Lebanese Falangist militia forces massacred several hundred Palestinians in the two camps.)

Ms. Oakley noted that for most countries, including Israel, "the United States does not require advance agreement on new attaché appointments. Attaches judged qualified by their governments are routinely accepted and reciprocal treatment is accorded to the appointment of U.S. defence attaches in those countries," she said.

On Feb. 23, the American Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee (AADC) delivered a letter to Secretary of State George Shultz protesting the administration's continued recognition of Gen. Yaron as Israel's military attaché to Washington.

AADC President Abdeen Jabara charged that, in light of Gen. Yaron's complicity in the 1982 massacres at the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps in Lebanon, his accreditation by the Departments of Defence and State violates both the letter and the spirit of the State Department's own definition of human rights as published in its 1987 Country Reports on Human Rights Practices.

The Country Reports refer to section 116 (a) of the Foreign Assistance Act for the following definition of human rights: "Human rights... include freedom from torture or cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment or punishment... and other flagrant denial of the rights, liberty, and the security of the person."

In 1983 an official Israeli commission of inquiry headed by Israel's Chief Justice Yitzhak Kahan, implicated then Gen. Yaron in the Sabra and Shatila massacres and subsequently stripped him of his field command.

In his letter, Mr. Jabara also rejected the government's argument that the U.S. and its allies routinely grant each other reciprocal treatment where the accreditation of defence attaches is concerned.

He noted that on Feb. 1, 1977 the U.S. refused a visa to Uruguayan military attaché-designate Maj. Nino Gavazzo on the grounds that he had been implicated in the torture of prisoners.

Libya campaigns to boost presence in South Pacific

MELBOURNE (R) — Libya has launched a campaign to boost its diplomatic and commercial activity in the South Pacific, the Age newspaper said Saturday.

It quoted Shaban Gashut, effectively Libya's ambassador to Australia and the South-West Pacific, as saying the move could lead to financial support for Kanaks fighting for independence from France in New Caledonia.

It said Col. Muammar Qadhafi's officials planned to set up Libya's first embassy in the Pacific islands — probably in Vanuatu — and was negotiating with other island governments to establish diplomatic relations.

Mr. Gashut, secretary of the Libyan People's Bureau (embassy) in Canberra, said his government wanted to expand "good relations with all the countries of the world."

Mr. Gashut has just returned from Vanuatu.

A Libyan trade delegation will begin a tour of the region next week to study prospects for investments worth tens of millions of dollars, including agricultural projects, tourism and property development.

Bush sees Iran scandal firestorm dying down

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa (R) — Vice President George Bush, in Iowa on a two-day political swing, has said he is convinced that the firestorm sparked by the Iran scandal is dying down.

"I find that Iowans are preoccupied with the real problems of the nation and not with Iran," he told an invited Republican support for his undeclared campaign for the 1988 Republican presidential nomination.

"We're (the Reagan administration) going to be judged not on this firestorm of the moment, which is now in my judgment receding, but on an overall record," he added.

But he also said he regrets he did not do more to block the arms deal.

"I think that all of us can stand up and say we wish we had done something different to spare the president and the country the failures of this policy," Mr. Bush said.

Mr. Bush, who is expected to formally declare his candidacy in the autumn, is the current frontrunner for the nomination. But his standing in the polls has fallen sharply since the public learned that U.S. arms were sold to Iran in a swap for Americans held hostage by pro-Iranian forces in Lebanon.

Recent polls in Iowa, which holds crucial party caucuses 11 months from now, show Mr. Bush trailing Senate Republican leader Robert Dole of Kansas by a small margin.

Mr. Bush has faced only a handful of questions about the Iran affair.

At another forum earlier Friday, Mr. Bush said: "There were a lot of mistakes — errors — the policy failed, it was wrong and the president has said so, so I believe he will recover."

"The erosion of confidence in leadership that may have been affected by that, in my view, is easily restored provided we do our jobs properly," he added.

Mr. Bush's top aides expressed delight at the large, friendly crowds that have greeted the vice president and admitted surprise at the dearth of questions about the Iran affair.

Arms scandal endangers Sweden's peace image

STOCKHOLM (R) — Sweden's reputation as an arbiter for world peace was Saturday in danger of being tarnished over an arms smuggling scandal which led to the resignation of the managing director of its biggest weapons firm, Bofors.

Martin Ardbo resigned as managing director Friday, saying it was not fitting he remained in charge of the firm while police investigated charges by Swedish peace groups that arms were exported to countries blacklisted by Swedish law.

But Mr. Ardbo denied his resignation was not an admission of guilt.

"It is not a good situation for Bofors to be in and so I think it is best I stand down," he told Swedish radio.

The Swedish Peace and Arbitration Society (SPAS) has accused Bofors of illegally exporting arms to warring countries, including Iran.

A SPAS researcher said Friday that 10 per cent of Bofors' exports of the Robot-70 portable anti-aircraft missile, considered by military experts to be one of the world's most sophisticated, were smuggled to blacklisted states.

Bofors denies the smuggling accusations, but a company official said Friday that it could not guarantee "ammunitions" had not reached Iran or other banned countries by way of a third party.

SPAS accuses Singapore of being one of the worst culprits for "laundering" Swedish weapons to other countries.

A customs investigation into Bofors and its sister-company Nobel Kemi has been completed and is being studied by prosecutors who are expected to publicise their findings next month.

The Bofors affair has become an increasing embarrassment to the Social Democratic government and its centre-right predecessors of the early 1980s, casting a shadow over Sweden's traditional role as a crusader for peace.

JORDAN TELEVISION
Tel: 773111-19
PROGRAMME ONE
15:30	Koran
15:50	Programme Review
16:05	Health Cliff
16:35	A Whole World of Children
17:00	Rising in All
17:30	Candid Camera
18:15	Local Agricultural Programme
18:40	Local Series
19:20	Local Programme
19:50	Programme Review
20:30	News in Arabic
21:10	A special programme in Arabic on Lebanon
PROGRAMME TWO
18:00	Cathrine
19:00	News in French
19:15	Frederico a la nuit
19:30	News in Hebrew
19:45	Varities
20:00	News in Arabic
20:30	Who's the Boss
21:10	The Day the Universe Changed
22:00	News in English
22:30	Spearsfield's Daughter
RADIO JORDAN
855 KHz, AM & 99 MHz, FM & party on 850 KHz, SW Tel: 774111-19
07:00	Light Music
07:30	Newsweek
08:00	Morning Show
09:00	News Summary
10:00	Pop Session
10:30	In Concert
11:00	News Summary
11:30	Pop Talk
12:00	News Summary
12:30	Pop Session contd.
13:00	News Bulletin
14:00	Instrumentals
14:30	Science Report
15:00	Concert Hour
16:00	News Summary
16:30	Old Favorites
17:00	Listeners' Choice
18:00	News Summary
18:30	Jazz Hour
19:00	Newsweek
19:30	Date with a Star
20:00	Evening Show
21:00	Evening Show continued
21:30	News Summary

WHAT'S GOING ON TODAY'S EVENTS
EXHIBITIONS
* An art exhibition depicting social life in Jordan and Egypt by Ibrahim Tamouli at the Petra Bank Gallery.
* An engineering exhibition at Yarmouk University (until March 9)
FILM
A film by the Jordan Cine-Club at 8:00 p.m. at the Royal Cultural Centre.
CULTURAL CENTRES
Royal Cultural Centre - Tel. 6610267
American Centre - 644371
British Centre - 641520
French Cultural Centre - 6391478
Goethe Institute - 67009
Soviet Cultural Centre - 644203
Spanish Cultural Centre - 630409
Turkish Cultural Centre - 639777
Retary Club. Meetings every Tuesday at the International Hotel, 2:00 p.m.
Royal Automobile Club. Jabel Amman, Eighth Circle. Tel. 816534, 817534.
CHURCHES
St. Joseph Church (Roman Catholic) Jabel Amman, Tel. 624590
Church of the Annunciation (Roman Catholic) Jabel Luweibeh, Tel. 637440.
De la Salle Church (Roman Catholic) Jabel Luweibeh, mass in Italian language, meet every Saturday at 5:30 p.m. Tel. 622566
Church of the Annunciation (Greek Orthodox) Abdali, Tel. 623541.
Anglican Church (Church of the Redeemer) Jabel Amman, Tel. 678906.
Armenian Catholic Church Astorfield, Tel. 771751.
Armenian Orthodox Church Ashrafieh, Tel. 772561.
St. Ephraim Church (Syrian Orthodox) Astorfield, Tel. 771751.
Armenian International Church (Interdenominational): meets at Southern Baptist School in Shmeisani, Tel. 677534.
Evangelical Lutheran Church Jabel Amman, Eighth Circle, (Rev. N. Smith), Tel. 811295.
PRAYER TIMES
04:35 Fajr
05:35 (Sunrise) Duha
11:47 Dhur
15:47 'Asr
17:48 Maghreb
18:38 'Isha

FOR THE TRAVELLER
QUEEN ALIA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT
This information is supplied by Royal Jordanian Information Department at the Queen Alia International Airport. Tel. (05) 53200-5, where it should always be verified.
ARRIVALS ROYAL JORDANIAN FLIGHTS (Terminal 1)
09:00	Dubai, Abu Dhabi (RJ)
09:30	Dubai, Abu Dhabi (RJ)
09:45	Jeddah (RJ)
10:00	Kuwait (RJ)
10:05	Doha, Bahrain (RJ)
10:30	Cairo, Aqaba (RJ)
10:30	New York, Amsterdam, London (RJ)
17:40	Athens (RJ)
18:05	Brussels, Frankfurt (RJ)
18:05	Los Angeles, Chicago, Vienna (RJ)
19:00	Madrid, Rome (RJ)
20:40	Paris, Geneva (RJ)
01:00	Baghdad (RJ)
OTHER FLIGHTS (Terminal 2)
02:25	Baghdad (RO)
06:00	Berlin, Larnaca (IF)
11:30	Cairo (MS)
11:45	Kuwait (LN)
12:30	Baghdad (LA)
12:30	Jeddah (SV)
12:50	Muscat, Abu Dhabi, Bahrain (GF)
13:45	Kuwait (KU)
14:00	Dubai (EK)
15:10	Athens, Damascus (RJ)
19:10	Frankfurt (LH)
DEPARTURES ROYAL JORDANIAN FLIGHTS (Terminal 1)
06:45	Agaba (RJ)
10:30	Tunis, Casablanca (RJ)
11:00	Vienna, New York (RJ)
11:30	Athens (RJ)
11:30	Cairo (RJ)
12:00	Jeddah (RJ)
12:30	Kuwait, Abu Dhabi (RJ)
21:00	Kuala Lumpur, Singapore (RJ)
21:00	Baghdad (RJ)
21:15	Damascus (RJ)
21:15	Cairo (RJ)
22:00	Dubai, Muscat (RJ)
23:00	Baghdad (RJ)
MONEY EXCHANGE
Local selling rates in Jds
Belgian franc	88.71 / 89.6
Dutch guilder	163.2 / 164.6
French franc	55.2 / 56.6
Italian lira	25.8 / 26.2
Japanese yen (for 100)	220.7 / 222.5

UNESCO financially sound despite pull outs by United States and England, M'bow says

By Sa'ad G. Hattar
Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — Heavily criticising the United States and England for pulling out of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO), the organisation's director general Amadou Mahtar M'bow said Saturday that UNESCO is financially viable.

"We managed to head-off the repercussions resulting from the two countries' withdrawal of their financial support through a host of prompt measures," Mr. M'bow told a press conference hours after His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hassan inaugurated two UNESCO regional offices in Amman.

Cutting back the organisations expenditure, deciding not to fill vacancies in the organisation as well as receiving extra contributions from several member states were the main measures which helped off-set UNESCO's deficit, he said. The two countries' (the U.S. and England) financial contributions to the organisation constituted as much as one third of its total budget of $374 million in 1984/1985, the years when the U.S. and England pulled out of the organisation, noted Mr. M'bow.

He charged that the United States' withdrawal from UN-

ESCO had been spearheaded to undermine the organisation's management — known to have assisted campaigns launched by liberation movements throughout the world — and jeopardise its efforts towards disseminating culture and education in underdeveloped countries.

"Ironically," he said, "the Americans should form an investigation committee — similar to the recent Tower commission on the U.S. arms scandal — to look into the reasons behind America's decision. The hearing session could be billed that of UNESCOgate."

Mr. M'bow supported his charges saying that the U.S. subsequently launched a media campaign against what it labelled mismanagement and financial blunders of the (UNESCO) management. By withholding funds, he continued, both the U.S. and England were hoping to disable UNESCO, with a fait accompli staff lay-off, an eventuality which would have undermined the whole institution. "They failed," said the 66-year-old Senegalese director general.

Referring to the organisation's continuous support of various liberation organisations in Africa and Asia, he noted that the assistance extended by UNESCO constituted scientific, cultural and educational contributions without being affected by any political affiliations.

Amadou Mahtar M'bow

Support for Palestinian students

Mr. M'bow noted that UNESCO staunchly supports the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) through extending funds earmarked for educational and cultural training programmes for Palestinians living in the occupied territories, Syria, Lebanon and Jordan.

Part of the funds, he added, are allocated for sending Palestinian undergraduates on scholarships abroad, as well as working on preserving the legacy and Arab culture of the occupied city of Jerusalem.

On the organisation's overall scheme, Mr. M'bow said that UNESCO was keen to eradicate illiteracy by the year 2000 and to make available compulsory education for all by that time. At present, there are approximately 125 million illiterate adults in the world.

Mr. M'bow said he was not planning to run for a third term in office since he said, such a nomination should be made by the 152 UNESCO member states in conformity with internal charters. However, he declined to reveal whether or not he would accept to hold his post should member states unanimously make the approach. "I will reply to that question only when it arises," he said.

Mr. M'bow's first term began in 1974 and ended in 1980.

Citing Jordan's geopolitical situation, Mr. M'bow said that the Kingdom was the most suitable location for the two regional offices; one of which had been operating in Beirut and the other in Cairo.

The staff of both the UNESCO Regional Office for Science and Technology for Arab States and the Regional Office for Education in Arab states had been operating for sometime from Paris until the Amman UNESCO premises had been completed.

Prince Hassan opens UNESCO regional offices in Amman

AMMAN (Petra) — His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hassan said Saturday that Jordan, along with other developing nations, continues to work towards scientific, cultural and educational development and the Kingdom appreciates any contribution in this respect from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO).

His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hassan Saturday delivers a speech during the inaugural ceremony for the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation's regional offices in Amman. The Crown Prince is flanked by Minister of Education Thouqan Hindawi (left) and UNESCO director general Amadou Mahtar M'bow (second right) and the regional director of the organisation Dr. Mohammad Ibrahim Kazem (right).

Jordan is among several developing nations which continue to confront major obstacles in their attempts to cope with advanced nations in the scientific, industrial and agricultural fields because of the lack of required expertise, insufficient natural resources and the absence of proper frameworks that could lead to scientific progress which advanced nations enjoy, Prince Hassan said in an address at an official ceremony for inaugurating the UNESCO's regional offices in Amman.

Numerous Arab states, the Crown Prince said, have gone a long way towards meeting the educational needs of their national societies and have been concentrating on spreading basic education to raise the cultural and social standards of these societies. But now there is a need to concentrate on quality rather than quantity in education in general and this is particularly relevant and important for absorbing appropriate and useful modern technology, Prince Hassan stressed.

But, the Crown Prince said that this process requires a lot of patience, perseverance and also flexibility in implementing educational programmes.

Prince Hassan said that natural resources and geographical locations play a contributory role in giving momentum to development but they can not form a sufficient basis for progress if the skilled human element is lacking. He said that Jordan has always supported the work of Arab scholars and researchers in a drive to attain high cultural and scientific standards. As part of these ongoing efforts, Prince Hassan said that Jordan has been giving more attention to scientific and cultural research, assessing its educational system with a view to improving its quality and directing available educational and vocational training towards the benefit of the society.

Prince Hassan also spoke about Jordan's educational and scientific programmes included in the 1986-1990 five-year national development plan and said that they are aimed at raising the cultural standards of society. These programmes complement health and public service projects being offered to communities and the public, Prince Hassan continued.

Through UNESCO's offices and Jordan's endeavours, this country hopes to offer contributions to the international community's efforts towards acquiring more culture and knowledge for humankind, Prince Hassan pointed out.

He said that through the Kingdom's cultural institutions, such as the Al Al Bait Foundation and the Forum Humanum as well as cultural conferences, Jordan continues to exert efforts towards achieving this end.

The Crown Prince paid tribute to UNESCO Director General Amadou Mahtar M'bow for his relentless efforts in promoting education, scientific and cultural development in different countries.

Mr. M'bow later made a speech in which he voiced appreciation to Prince Hassan for patronising the inauguration ceremony and he thanked Jordan for its continued cooperation with UNESCO in promoting education and knowledge. Mr. M'bow also spoke about UNESCO's expansion since the 1960s which, he said, warranted the increase of its programmes and cooperation with countries around the world.

Minister of Education Thouqan Hindawi also made a speech on the occasion, expressing Jordan's delight at hosting UNESCO's regional office in Amman.

He said that the UNESCO office will contribute towards the educational, cultural and scientific development of the Arab region and will help carry out national programmes in these fields. Jordan has followed with interest UNESCO's activities and programmes around the world and deeply appreciates Mr. M'bow's endeavours for preserving Islamic and Arab culture in occupied Arab Jerusalem and UNESCO's request to Israel to respect the Geneva and The Hague conventions which call on occupation authorities to desist from committing any actions against educational and cultural institutions under occupation, the minister said.

He went on to say that UNESCO has always represented the highest ideal of spreading justice, enlightenment, equality, tolerance and amity among nations and has always striven to safeguard cultural heritage and rights.

Dr. Mohammad Ibrahim Kazem, the UNESCO office director, later addressed the meeting referring to the Arab contributions to the world's culture and science and arts.

The opening ceremony was attended by Speaker of the Upper House of Parliament Ahmad Lawzi, Cabinet members and senior officials as well as members of the diplomatic corps in Jordan.

24 post offices start forwarding job application forms to CSC

AMMAN (J.T.) — Twenty four post offices around the Kingdom on Saturday started receiving and forwarding job applications to the Civil Service Commission (CSC) in implementation of a recent government decision.

The move is to save effort and time for members of the public seeking employment in government offices in Jordan, according to Mr. Muhieddin Al Hussein, the minister of communications.

There are plans to increase and expand the services provided by post offices in the country and more post offices will be assigned to handle CSC application forms shortly, the minister said in a statement to the Jordan News Agency, Petra. He said that in addition to receiving and forwarding applications for employment, post offices in Jordan handle applications for registration at the Civil Registration Department, for enrolment at Jordanian universities and renewing vehicle licenses.

The Ministry of Communications, the minister said, initially assigned 24 post offices to handle applications for the CSC but the number will be increased in the light of the demand for the service. The ministry does not charge any fees for this service, he noted.

The CSC normally processes the applications and makes arrangements for employment in cooperation with the concerned government departments and offices. The applications will be sent to the CSC daily at ordinary postage fees, Mr. Hussein explained. A receipt is issued by the post office after handing in the application and this serves as an official document that the application and other attached documents were sent in by post, the minister continued.

The CSC has already provided the Ministry of Communications and post offices with specific instructions about submitting applications and forwarding them, and each application is handled separately and sent in a closed envelope, he said.

A specific number of post offices in the Kingdom have been handling the fast mail delivery service. So far, 19 countries are participating in this service. The express mail service, launched last July, ensures a 24 hour service and is being handled by 24 post offices in Amman and other cities and towns in the Kingdom.

Bar association elects new ten-member council

By Salameh B. Ne'matt
Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — The committee supervising the Jordan Bar Association's (JBA) elections continued the vote count throughout Friday night till dawn Saturday when it announced the winners of the 10-member council of the association.

Jordanian lawyers reelected Mr. Hussein Mjalli as JBA president for a new two-year term on Friday, a sweeping victory over candidates Mr. Omar Ahn Al Ragheb and Mr. Nabil Haddadin. The vote count was 538, 345, and 127 respectively.

The ten council seats were filled by the following lawyers: Zuhair Al-Dissi (595 votes); Ahmad Abu Aqoub (497); Zuhair Abu Al Ragheb (482); Salim Al Zoubi (445); Tayseer Hawamed (441); Marwan Hussein (422); Ahmad Abu Samen (394); Walid Assaili (389); Kamal Nasser (383); and Mohammad Al Rashdan (379). There were 27 contenders for council seats.

Asma Khader and Aisha Faraj who received 231 and 106 votes respectively, were the only two female lawyers running in the elections. Though they did not win any seats, their results were seen by colleagues as encouraging for women lawyers.

The turn out was considered the highest ever in the association's history as 1,060 lawyers voted out of the registered 1,276, reflecting a keen interest in the election's outcome. There were 50 blank ballots. Mr. Mjalli had to secure half plus one the votes cast (1,060) to win the election, according to the association's law. He secured the requirement from the first round.

Lawyers interviewed by the Jordan Times said the election's results did not come as a surprise. One lawyer explained that "people were voting for somebody they already knew to be doing a good job. Many were simply not taking chances on somebody else."

Some attributed Mr. Mjalli's victory to his personality and flexibility, others to his wide contacts and strong financial position, allowing him to spend more on his election campaign. Observers close to association electioneering said that "nearly JD 50,000 were spent in campaign money by the three candidates for the association presidency alone."

The three candidates hardly differed on the issues raised during campaigning. Their pledges centred on improving the financial status of lawyers, the Bar Association's relationship with various government and non-governmental agencies, retirement pension and other benefits.

Lawyer Ibrahim Bakr, three times association president was conspicuously absent from Friday's elections while an unusually high number of women attended as two women were running for seats.

Lawyers' main concern in the election was the expansion and enactment of a law that obliges companies with more than JD 150,000 capital to hire Jordanian lawyers.

Campus hosts training course on computers in agriculture

AMMAN (Petra) — Jordan has successfully applied the concept of comprehensive agricultural development in the Jordan Valley region and is now trying to apply the experience in other areas through regional planning. Ministry of Agriculture Under Secretary Salem Al-Lawzi said Saturday.

He said that the Ministry of Agriculture, which supervises various agricultural projects in the Kingdom, is increasingly maintaining cooperation with the University of Jordan and other regional and international organisations to work towards achieving the best results in farming.

Dr. Lawzi was addressing the opening session of an eight-day training course on the employment of computers in analysing projects and agricultural policies, organised in cooperation with the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO).

Dr. Lawzi said that modern technology is being used more and more to help ensure food security and to increase the amounts of crops and also to pursue research to find the most suitable strains of crops for given climatic conditions.

Other speakers at the opening session included Dr. Zuhair Abdullah, a FAO regional office consultant, who urged Near East and North African countries to double their efforts in food production and he stressed the importance of sound planning to ensure success. The present training course is aimed at promoting agricultural planning to cope with national development schemes, Dr. Abdullah said.

Another speaker was Mahmoud Al Dwiri, the dean of the University of Jordan's Faculty of Agriculture, who underlined the on-job training programmes which the university is conducting on the use of computers and advanced techniques.

JTV to screen special programme on life in South Lebanon tonight

AMMAN (J.T.) — Jordan Television (JTV) will present a special programme tonight entitled "Zahrat Al Kindoul" which relates the story of a woman from South Lebanon and her harrowing experiences under Israeli occupation.

The woman named Khadijah demonstrates and protests against Israel's atrocities and demands freedom for men held at Ansar detention camp. She is arrested and imprisoned for a year. Similar experiences occur in southern Lebanon where the situation prompts other women to participate in what develops into widespread popular resistance.

The documentary reveals aspects of the daily life and traditions featuring the cultural life of the local inhabitants. The documentary will be presented at 8:30 p.m.

Zahrat Al Kindoul means a wild flower that grows between the rocks. The flower has yellow roots and is surrounded by thorns.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Mrs. M'bow calls at women's federation

AMMAN (Petra) — The wife of Mr. Amadou Mahtar M'bow, the director general of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO), Saturday visited the General Federation of Jordanian Wameo. Mrs. M'bow was briefed by the federation's president, Mrs. Haifa Al Bashir, on the federation's activities and goals. She also visited Al Khansaa' centre where she toured its sections and was briefed on the services and training courses which the centre holds for Jordanian women.

Arab labour conference underway

BAGHDAD (Petra) — Jordan is taking part in the 15th Arab labour conference which was opened in Baghdad on Saturday by Iraqi Vice-President Taha Mohieddin Ma'rouf. Minister of Labour and Social Development Khaled Al Haj Hassan is heading Jordan's delegation to the conference. The week-long conference is being attended by labour ministers, heads of labour unions as well as employers in Arab countries.

AOAS discusses employment policies

AMMAN (Petra) — A meeting on employment policies and manpower in Arab countries began in Amman on Saturday at the Arab Organisation for Administrative Sciences (AOAS). The six-day meeting is discussing topics on employment policies at government organisations in Arab states, personnel systems, ethics of public service in addition to other subjects. Taking part in the meeting are Arab officials and experts in the personnel field and AOAS experts.

Bank extends JD 43.9m for housing

AMMAN (Petra) — The Housing Bank last year granted loans totalling JD 43.9 million to private and public sector housing projects in the Kingdom, according to a statistical bulletin released by the bank on Saturday. The bulletin said that the public sector obtained 40 per cent of the Housing Bank loans which were used to build homes for government employees and for implementing projects undertaken by the Urban Development Department.

U.S. agriculture expert to give lectures

AMMAN (J.T.) — Dr. David Pimental, professor of insect ecology and agricultural sciences at Cornell University, will be visiting Jordan under the auspices of the American Cultural Centre in Amman. During his visit from March 9 - 11, he will meet with Jordanian officials in the field of agriculture and give lectures to students at the University of Jordan and the University of Science and Technology. Professor Pimental will also tour the Jordan Valley and the Jordan Valley agricultural service project. Professor Pimental has written extensively and has authored many research papers in the field of agriculture.

MARRIOTT KNOWS THE SECRET OF GOOD CUISINE

ARABIC SPECIALTIES

Friday lunch at Al Mansaf offers the best in traditional or special Arabic dishes. Served buffet style, you can relax and savor traditional mezze and a marvelous main course - a wonderful weekend treat for you - or your guests.

WELCOME AMIGOS! -SU CASA MEXICO!

Come to our hacienda and join in the South of the Border fiesta each Sunday night.

Al-Mansaf has the best tacos, fritos, frijoles, burritos and margaritas in town. The great Mexican fiesta at Marriott.

MARRIOTT'S 'Su Casa' MEXICAN FOOD CELEBRATION. Sunday nights in Al-Mansaf.

AMMAN Marriott HOTEL

ماريوت عمان

Reservations suggested. Tel. 660100 ext. 2057

Jordan Times

Chairman of the Board of Directors:
MUHAMMAD AL KAYED
Responsible Editor and Managing Editor:
MUHAMMAD AMAD
Editor-in-Chief:
GEORGE S. HAWATMEH
Editorial and advertising offices:
Jordan Press Foundation,
University Road, P.O. Box 5710, Amman, Jordan.
Telephone: 667171-5, 678141-4
Telex: 21497 ALKAI JO
Facsimile: 666242
The Jordan Times is published daily except Fridays.
Subscription and advertising rates are available from the Jordan Times advertising department.

More of the same

AFTER a three-month self-imposed silence, President Ronald Reagan addressed the American people on Wednesday to make a clean breast of the Iran arms scandal. He took "full responsibility" for his actions, which, he said, were aimed "to develop relations with those who might assume leadership in a post-Khomeini government." The U.S. president said he did not set out to trade arms for hostages, but he fully admitted that the policy turned into such a swap. This, of course, was contrary to his administration's policy towards hostage-takers and to what he told the American people a few months ago.

The remainder of President Reagan's address dealt with how to avoid such mistakes in the future and how to better structure America's foreign policy set-up. He, however, paid little attention to the question of the policy's wisdom or the damage it has done to American credibility. President Reagan, it seems, has taken full responsibility for little else than memory lapses and policy mismanagement. He has failed to take responsibility or admit error for a horrendously conceived policy, nor for providing Iran with arms to launch fresh offensives against Iraq. In fact, he defended his policy of seeking influence in the Iranian government through providing Tehran with arms. This policy was not only in contradiction to stated American neutrality in the Iran-Iraq war, but it also no doubt encouraged Iran to attack Basra and other Iraqi targets. We may rightly ask the American president if he assumes responsibility for the death and destruction which has taken place in Iran over the last few months.

There was no mention of regret or apology by Mr. Reagan for following an Israeli-inspired policy of support for a country which poses a military threat to the Arab World. It seems that such a policy is acceptable to the Reagan administration. He has not even apologised for telling the Arab countries one thing, and doing exactly the opposite.

What are we to conclude from Mr. Reagan's speech; his focus on process and reticence over policy? One thing appears abundantly clear. President Reagan has no qualms about working with Israel to assist a country at war with an Arab country. This is one ominous but unavoidable conclusion from the president's address.

This suggests that the Reagan administration has learned little from its soul-searching reexamination about the folly of its Middle East policy. We now have a U.S. administration with new faces and a new structure, but with the same biased policy. It appears that, despite the political storm stirred in the United States over the Iran arms scandal, we in the Arab World should expect little change from the "new" administration — just more of the same.

ARABIC PRESS EDITORIALS

Al Ra'i: U.S. media defends Zionism

A certain number of American newspapers are busy at the moment with a campaign directed against the proposed Middle East international peace conference. These papers seem to be reflecting the Zionist movement's fears of such a conference which has won the endorsement of the European Community. These newspapers are once again drumming up the idea of direct negotiations which Israel has been calling for, and inviting Jordan to enter into direct negotiations with Israel outside the proposed conference. These newspapers and those who stand behind them seem to have failed to understand that Jordan cannot serve as an agent for the Palestinian people, nor can it act for them in any negotiations for peace. On the whole, the campaign can never force Jordan to abandon its position nor will it impede the peace process that will go through that conference. This campaign, led by the New York Times, has a clear message: Forces that are hostile to peace in our region do not want to budge from their negative stand and that these forces are determined to abort all efforts that steer this region towards real peace. This situation should prompt the Arabs and the Europeans to take a firm position and intensify their efforts for holding such a conference as soon as possible, and at the same time, persuade Washington of the need of such international parity for achieving a lasting peace in the Middle East.

Al Dustour: Lesson for the U.S.

THE sentencing of Jonathan Pollard to life imprisonment was tantamount to issuing a certificate incriminating the state of Israel. As if it was not enough for Israel to receive unlimited support and financial and military help from its ally, it resorted to planting spies like Pollard to get the secrets of a nation that has been providing means of subsistence to Israel. This instance of a country spying in such a manner on an ally could be unprecedented in international relations. The planting of Israeli spies in America reflects Israel's views that all that the United States has been giving to Israel and all the support it has been providing to the Jewish state was not sufficient. Israel and the United States are closely connected and Washington has been condoning Israel's long series of violations in the Arab region and supporting Israel blindly at world organisations. But, in view of the exposure of the new Israeli espionage activity we would like to urge the United States to take lessons from the past and regard its Israeli ally as a traitor, one that betrays the trust and commits shameful actions. We have heard statements by U.S. officials saying that the outcome of the affair would not damage the relations between the U.S. and Israel, and we wonder if this represents the official American position.

Sawt Al Shaab: Lebanon's peace

THE Lebanese leaders are nowadays involved in long consultations and debates about a formula for ending the civil strife in their country and re-establishing peace and security for all factions and communities. This is a necessary step that paves the way for a lasting peace and progress which should be the aim of all factions and political groups. The ideal thing is to work out a formula that ensures the rights of all factions without the fear of one community or political group imposing its domination on the others. Those involved in the discussions and consultations should take into consideration the Arab character of Lebanon and its affiliation to the motherland away from any foreign influences. The political leaders of Lebanon are called on to take precautionary measures against the interference of Zionist agents who can only poison the atmosphere and obstruct detente. The Lebanese should realise that their interests lie primarily with the Arab World, and their progress and their existence are closely connected with the rest of the Arab countries specially with Syria, their closest neighbour which continues to provide help and support for the Lebanese people. We hope that the on-going work and the current talks in Damascus will lead to a lasting peace.

Sunday's Economic Pulse

Are we over or under taxed?

By Dr. Fahed Fanek

THERE are two extreme points of view regarding the size of the tax burden on Jordanians. Some argue that tax is very low, while others argue that it is too high.

The opponents of "low tax" say that tax revenues are minimal, hardly covering 50 per cent of the total public expenditure. They say that in order for the government to raise funds it resorts to external financial resources, mainly borrowing.

The other group believes that tax burden in Jordan is too excessive and that it could be one of the highest imposed on any people. They say that despite the fact that income tax is low, other taxes and rates account for a huge amount of the national income.

Obviously, the tax burden in Jordan is very high as a percentage of domestic income, but it is also very low as a percentage of the central government budget. This fact indicates that the distortion does not lie in the revenue side which grew out of proportion and beyond the means of the Jordanian economy.

In a country where gross national product in market prices does not exceed JD 1,420 million (1986), it is quite conceivable that the budget of the central government alone should have been as high as JD 1,018 million. And if one adds on top the budgets of the Social Security Corporation (SSC) and the municipalities, which are covered through direct taxes on people that do not show up in the government budget, the burden becomes quite visible.

Let us assume roughly that the SSC collects some JD 120 million a year in deductions and charges on salaries of the private sector, which is no doubt, an outright direct tax. And if we also estimate that municipalities collect around JD 100 million in property taxes and other fees on services and fuel, which is also direct tax. This means that no less than 87 per cent of the national income should be absorbed by taxes of all kinds to the central and local governments if we want to cover their budgets' needs without dependence on external aid or local and foreign loans. This is simply an impossible ratio to achieve.

The real tax burden shouldered by the Jordanian people comprises JD 435 million paid annually to the central government, and JD 220 million payable to the SSC and all municipalities, a total of JD 655 million, or 46 per cent of the national income, a ratio unheard of in any developing country, and too high even by the standards of the advanced industrialised nations.

If these figures and ratios are correct, or even close to depicting the picture, or if the tax burden in Jordan is higher than 35 per cent of the national income, then the reform of our fiscal policies and the remedies to improve the situation should not be confined to the imposition of more taxes and fees. That reform should take place in the area of reducing the public expenditure of the central government. Our budget should stop growing at any rate, and if possible, should even shrink gradually at a reasonable annual rate.

We are of course fully aware that budget reduction is an extremely painful measure to be taken by any government. It calls for huge sacrifices, and claims many victims but, in the light of the given figures and rates of the present tax burden, we cannot see a different course of action. Some measure must be taken if we want to base our financial position and policies on sound and sustainable basis over the next years.

Kaunda sees grim past, bright future for independent Africa

By Robert Powell
Reuters

LUSAKA — Zambian President Kenneth Kaunda believes Africa is the continent of the future, despite powerful forces for destabilisation which have beset its emerging countries.

"We have experienced many, upsets," Kaunda told Reuters in an interview to mark the 30th anniversary last Friday of independent Ghana, the first black African nation to shed colonial rule.

Kaunda, who led his own country to independence in 1964, added: "Military coups have taken place. Counter-coups have taken place... In the economic field there have been grave difficulties."

"A number of leading African countries today — leading in terms of population — have not managed to find a formula for political stability," the 63-year-old president noted.

Kaunda has led Zambia since independence from Britain and today plays a major role in African affairs as chairman of the front-line states — the six black-ruled states most deeply involved in the struggle against South Africa's apartheid.

Despite his gloomy assessment of the early years of independence, Kaunda said he still believed that "Africa, properly handled, is the continent of the future."

"We have first and foremost a growing population. Secondly we have natural resources which are hardly tapped, so what we require is stability, careful thought and planning," he said.

Kaunda, a devout Christian who has developed his own brand of social democracy which he calls humanism, said Africa needed to develop societies based on "love, truth, social justice and fair play."

European colonial powers were partly to blame for the political failures of Africa's independent states, because they had failed to prepare them for self-rule, Kaunda said.

"No colonial power ever taught any one of us how to build democracies. The whole colonial fabric was a fabric of oppression and suppression," he said.

"Zambia, for instance, at independence had only 100 university graduates. That is after the British colonial power had pumped out so much copper," he added.

"At independence, we have not learned anything by way of democracy. Our own zeal to fight for what we believed to be right and just... was all that we had by way of guidelines towards a democratic society," Kaunda added.

"All the instruments of power were in the hands of foreigners and this was not peculiar to Zambia, it was a common feature of all African countries," Kaunda said.

The intrusion of superpower conflicts into Africa and the fall in the value of Africa's commodity exports were other factors which had tended to destabilise the emerging states, he said.

"The forces of destabilisation were so powerful that what is surprising, in my opinion, is that there are still some African countries ticking as they are today."

Kaunda pointed to the persistence of white-dominated rule in South Africa as a potential volcano that could blow apart the whole of southern Africa.

"This situation in southern Africa is going to escalate," he predicted, arguing that economic sanctions were the only form of peaceful pressure which might succeed in abolishing apartheid without a bloodbath.

Landlocked Zambia still relies on rail routes to South African ports to carry about half its foreign trade, but Kaunda said the country hoped to cut its air links with South Africa this year in coordination with other black-ruled African states.

He described the proposed air embargo as Zambia's "key area of operations" in its campaign for global economic sanctions against the white-ruled government in Pretoria.

Kaunda said the main problem facing African economies was "a terrifyingly exploitative economic order."

"I see slave conditions in the so-called Third World... We are being reduced to the status of beggars," he said.

The only way out of Africa's "vicious circle" of declining export income and increasing debt was to improve the pricing of its commodity exports, he said.

Zambia relies on copper and other mineral exports for 95 to 98 per cent of its foreign exchange earnings and Kaunda pointed out that the country's economy had suffered from a slump in copper prices since the early 1970s.

But the president said that despite many difficulties, Zambians had managed to take over the running of their own country and maintain its unity and stability.

"For us, the greatest blessing we have had is that in spite of the turmoil all around us, the wars of liberation and the counter-activities of the racist south of us, Zambia has remained true to its slogan: 'One Zambia, one nation.' Stability has been the hallmark of our operations," he said.

Kaunda recognised that many veteran African leaders were reluctant to quit power, despite their advancing age, but said he did not see this as a factor giving rise to traumatic leadership changes.

"The forces that lead to instability are, in my opinion, far removed from the sort of period one serves," said Kaunda.

Finally, he defended the Organisation of African Unity (OAU) as "the best organised of all continental organisations," despite its failure to deal effectively with many problems on the continent. "We are certainly hopeful that the next 30 years will see a lot more progress towards unity and towards more effectiveness," he said.

Kenneth Kaunda

Maltese fear election violence

By Joe Scicluna
Reuters

VALLETTA — An undercurrent of political tension runs through the Mediterranean island of Malta as campaigning gathers pace for an election which will pass judgment on 15 years of Socialist rule.

The election atmosphere was charged by a burst of political violence last November.

Now politicians are trying hard to cool passions for fear that another outbreak of trouble could frighten away tourists, the lifeblood of a stagnating economy.

The election has to be held by the middle of May but Prime Minister Carmelo Mifsud Bonnici has delayed announcing polling day. Political pundits think it will be in early May.

Mifsud Bonnici, a 53-year-old lawyer handicapped by longtime former leader Dom Mintoff to take over the reins in December 1984, is seeking a fourth five-year term for the Labour Party.

But the vote promises to be a close-run contest yet again with the right-wing Nationalist Party headed by another lawyer Edward Fenech Adami, also 53.

Violence flared in November with 23 people injured in clashes during a Nationalist march. Four had gunshot wounds. A week later a Nationalist supporter was shot dead.

The violence put a damper on electioneering. Some incidents have been reported since then but nothing serious. Scuffles broke out at a rally last week but no-one was hurt.

"The tension is just below the surface," said one longtime resident of the capital Valletta.

Malta, lying between Italy and Libya and home to 330,000 people, has become so politically polarised over the past few years there is likely to be little movement of supporters from one party to the other.

The Nationalists say many Labourites have gone over to them and Mifsud Bonnici has acknowledged some "lost sheep" which must be brought back to the Labour fold.

In the last election in December, 1981, the Nationalists won 51 per cent of the vote but Labour ended up in power with more seats — 34 to 31 in the 65-member parliament.

Now the constitution has been amended to ensure that in future

Carmelo Mifsud Bonnici

the party with more than 50 per cent of the vote will have majority representation.

With the two parties so closely balanced, new voters — youths who have never voted before — could tip the balance.

Both parties are addressing the interests of the young at rallies where attendances of 100,000 are not uncommon.

Labour boasts of creating new schools, training schemes and free university education.

But the economy is the key election issue, with unemployment hovering around six per cent of the workforce, wages frozen for the last four years, industry lagging and exports struggling.

The Nationalists accuse the government for mismanagement of the economy in general and failure to create permanent jobs and attract foreign investment in particular.

Labour blames the country's problems on the international recession and says it is beginning to turn the country towards a better economic environment.

Last year Malta signed a trade accord with Moscow to open the way for increased exports, mainly textiles.

The Soviet Union has ordered 16 small ships from Malta and will be sending more merchant ships for repair and refit.

Malta also signed an aid package with Italy and trade with Libya is increasing again after a sharp drop.

The balance of payments pulled out of the red last year with a surplus of nearly $14 million.

Tourism is on the verge of a boom and could give the economy a vital boost. The number of visitors is confidently expected to surpass the 1986 influx of 573,000 which brought in earnings of nearly $170 million.

Jerry Rawlings — Ghana's radical, determined leader

ACCRA (R) — Flight Lieutenant Jerry Rawlings seized power twice in Ghana in a bid to stamp out the corruption which reduced the once-prosperous African country to poverty — and he has hung on to it with ruthless determination.

The urban poor, the lower ranks in the military and left-wing intellectuals see him as an honest alternative to a succession of often-venal generals and politicians.

Even his critics — and their number increased sharply after his second coup on December 31, 1981 — grudgingly concede that Rawlings is a man above suspicion with a modest lifestyle.

Professing non-alignment, Rawlings has moved Ghana firmly to the left — praising Libya's leader Muammar Qadhafi, visiting Cuba and Nicaragua in 1984 and tangle with the United States.

Despite at least a dozen plots and several attempted coups since 1981, and the resignation, arrest or flight of five of the original seven members of the country's ruling council, Rawlings has clung to power.

The former British colony's traditional ties with the West, particularly the United States, have been allowed to cool. But to gain support from the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund (IMF), Rawlings has had to follow more conservative economic policies.

He was born in Accra on June 22, 1947, the son of a Scottish retail chemist and a mother from Ghana's Ewe tribe. Mixed marriages were a rarity in pre-independence Ghana, then a British colony called the Gold Coast.

After school at Achimota, one of the best English-speaking academies in West Africa, where he was remembered as a rebel, he enrolled in the Ghana military academy at Teshie and was commissioned as a pilot officer in 1969.

A bureaucratic mistake at Teshie led to his name, originally Jerry Rawlings John, being registered as Jerry John Rawlings. The name stuck when supporters demonstrated in favour of "J.J." or "Junior Jesus."

Rawlings first won world attention on June 4, 1979, when at the age of 31 he overthrew General Fred Akuffo and formed an all-ranks military administration which set about economic "house-cleaning."

Within days, three former military heads of state, including General Akuffo, were executed for "economic sabotage" and personal enrichment, and senior officers, civil servants and businessmen were jailed — one for 150 years.

Rawlings kept his promise to hold free elections once the "house-cleaning" was finished and stepped down in favour of an elected civilian government headed by President Hilla Limann in September 1979.

Rawlings returned to private life, having been retired by the Limann government, and spent much of the next 25 months studying Marx, social philosopher Frantz Fanon and Libya's Qadhafi.

Friends described him during this period as brooding and morose, chain-smoking his way through marathon political discussions, but known as a snappy dresser albeit with a revolver often tucked in his waistband.

Meanwhile the economy continued to deteriorate, and after weeks of rumours Libyan-trained troops reinstated Rawlings in power, at the head of the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC), which promptly suspended the constitution, dissolved parliament and banned political parties.

It soon became clear that the newly-politicised Rawlings had no intention of handing back power for the second time. The PNDC set up people's and workers' defence committees with wide powers, restored diplomatic relations with Libya and improved ties with Communist nations.

But opposition has persisted, with the reported execution of dozens of people of corruption or plotting against the state. Rawlings seems undeterred. "No matter what happens, this country will not be the same again," he has said. "Now the masses are wide awake and they are not going back to sleep any more."

But opposition has persisted, with the reported execution of dozens of people of corruption or plotting against the state. Rawlings seems undeterred. "No matter what happens, this country will not be the same again," he has said. "Now the masses are wide awake and they are not going back to sleep any more."

Rawlings kept his promise to hold free elections once the "house-cleaning" was finished and stepped down in favour of an elected civilian government headed by President Hilla Limann in September 1979.

Rawlings returned to private life, having been retired by the Limann government, and spent much of the next 25 months studying Marx, social philosopher Frantz Fanon and Libya's Qadhafi.

Friends described him during this period as brooding and morose, chain-smoking his way through marathon political discussions, but known as a snappy dresser albeit with a revolver often tucked in his waistband.

Meanwhile the economy continued to deteriorate, and after weeks of rumours Libyan-trained troops reinstated Rawlings in power, at the head of the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC), which promptly suspended the constitution, dissolved parliament and banned political parties.

It soon became clear that the newly-politicised Rawlings had no intention of handing back power for the second time. The PNDC set up people's and workers' defence committees with wide powers, restored diplomatic relations with Libya and improved ties with Communist nations.

But opposition has persisted, with the reported execution of dozens of people of corruption or plotting against the state. Rawlings seems undeterred. "No matter what happens, this country will not be the same again," he has said. "Now the masses are wide awake and they are not going back to sleep any more."

Rawlings kept his promise to hold free elections once the "house-cleaning" was finished and stepped down in favour of an elected civilian government headed by President Hilla Limann in September 1979.

Rawlings returned to private life, having been retired by the Limann government, and spent much of the next 25 months studying Marx, social philosopher Frantz Fanon and Libya's Qadhafi.

Friends described him during this period as brooding and morose, chain-smoking his way through marathon political discussions, but known as a snappy dresser albeit with a revolver often tucked in his waistband.

Meanwhile the economy continued to deteriorate, and after weeks of rumours Libyan-trained troops reinstated Rawlings in power, at the head of the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC), which promptly suspended the constitution, dissolved parliament and banned political parties.

It soon became clear that the newly-politicised Rawlings had no intention of handing back power for the second time. The PNDC set up people's and workers' defence committees with wide powers, restored diplomatic relations with Libya and improved ties with Communist nations.

But opposition has persisted, with the reported execution of dozens of people of corruption or plotting against the state. Rawlings seems undeterred. "No matter what happens, this country will not be the same again," he has said. "Now the masses are wide awake and they are not going back to sleep any more."

Rawlings kept his promise to hold free elections once the "house-cleaning" was finished and stepped down in favour of an elected civilian government headed by President Hilla Limann in September 1979.

Rawlings returned to private life, having been retired by the Limann government, and spent much of the next 25 months studying Marx, social philosopher Frantz Fanon and Libya's Qadhafi.

Friends described him during this period as brooding and morose, chain-smoking his way through marathon political discussions, but known as a snappy dresser albeit with a revolver often tucked in his waistband.

Meanwhile the economy continued to deteriorate, and after weeks of rumours Libyan-trained troops reinstated Rawlings in power, at the head of the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC), which promptly suspended the constitution, dissolved parliament and banned political parties.

It soon became clear that the newly-politicised Rawlings had no intention of handing back power for the second time. The PNDC set up people's and workers' defence committees with wide powers, restored diplomatic relations with Libya and improved ties with Communist nations.

But opposition has persisted, with the reported execution of dozens of people of corruption or plotting against the state. Rawlings seems undeterred. "No matter what happens, this country will not be the same again," he has said. "Now the masses are wide awake and they are not going back to sleep any more."

Rawlings kept his promise to hold free elections once the "house-cleaning" was finished and stepped down in favour of an elected civilian government headed by President Hilla Limann in September 1979.

Rawlings returned to private life, having been retired by the Limann government, and spent much of the next 25 months studying Marx, social philosopher Frantz Fanon and Libya's Qadhafi.

Friends described him during this period as brooding and morose, chain-smoking his way through marathon political discussions, but known as a snappy dresser albeit with a revolver often tucked in his waistband.

Meanwhile the economy continued to deteriorate, and after weeks of rumours Libyan-trained troops reinstated Rawlings in power, at the head of the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC), which promptly suspended the constitution, dissolved parliament and banned political parties.

It soon became clear that the newly-politicised Rawlings had no intention of handing back power for the second time. The PNDC set up people's and workers' defence committees with wide powers, restored diplomatic relations with Libya and improved ties with Communist nations.

But opposition has persisted, with the reported execution of dozens of people of corruption or plotting against the state. Rawlings seems undeterred. "No matter what happens, this country will not be the same again," he has said. "Now the masses are wide awake and they are not going back to sleep any more."

Rawlings kept his promise to hold free elections once the "house-cleaning" was finished and stepped down in favour of an elected civilian government headed by President Hilla Limann in September 1979.

Rawlings returned to private life, having been retired by the Limann government, and spent much of the next 25 months studying Marx, social philosopher Frantz Fanon and Libya's Qadhafi.

Friends described him during this period as brooding and morose, chain-smoking his way through marathon political discussions, but known as a snappy dresser albeit with a revolver often tucked in his waistband.

Meanwhile the economy continued to deteriorate, and after weeks of rumours Libyan-trained troops reinstated Rawlings in power, at the head of the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC), which promptly suspended the constitution, dissolved parliament and banned political parties.

It soon became clear that the newly-politicised Rawlings had no intention of handing back power for the second time. The PNDC set up people's and workers' defence committees with wide powers, restored diplomatic relations with Libya and improved ties with Communist nations.

But opposition has persisted, with the reported execution of dozens of people of corruption or plotting against the state. Rawlings seems undeterred. "No matter what happens, this country will not be the same again," he has said. "Now the masses are wide awake and they are not going back to sleep any more."

Rawlings kept his promise to hold free elections once the "house-cleaning" was finished and stepped down in favour of an elected civilian government headed by President Hilla Limann in September 1979.

Rawlings returned to private life, having been retired by the Limann government, and spent much of the next 25 months studying Marx, social philosopher Frantz Fanon and Libya's Qadhafi.

Friends described him during this period as brooding and morose, chain-smoking his way through marathon political discussions, but known as a snappy dresser albeit with a revolver often tucked in his waistband.

Meanwhile the economy continued to deteriorate, and after weeks of rumours Libyan-trained troops reinstated Rawlings in power, at the head of the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC), which promptly suspended the constitution, dissolved parliament and banned political parties.

It soon became clear that the newly-politicised Rawlings had no intention of handing back power for the second time. The PNDC set up people's and workers' defence committees with wide powers, restored diplomatic relations with Libya and improved ties with Communist nations.

But opposition has persisted, with the reported execution of dozens of people of corruption or plotting against the state. Rawlings seems undeterred. "No matter what happens, this country will not be the same again," he has said. "Now the masses are wide awake and they are not going back to sleep any more."

Rawlings kept his promise to hold free elections once the "house-cleaning" was finished and stepped down in favour of an elected civilian government headed by President Hilla Limann in September 1979.

Rawlings returned to private life, having been retired by the Limann government, and spent much of the next 25 months studying Marx, social philosopher Frantz Fanon and Libya's Qadhafi.

Friends described him during this period as brooding and morose, chain-smoking his way through marathon political discussions, but known as a snappy dresser albeit with a revolver often tucked in his waistband.

'Crises

Ford, aided by space technology, returns to Mideast

By Rory Channing
Reuters

KUWAIT — The American car-maker Ford, diplomatically helped by space technology, has launched a strong comeback in the Arab World after being blacklisted for 20 years.

Its return coincides with an upheaval in the market, with America's arch-rivals from Japan hard-pressed to stem an erosion in their sales dominance because of the strong yen.

The Arab League, judging Ford to have complied with its rules barring dealings with Israel, in 1985 lifted a boycott slapped on the company for selling vehicles for assembly there.

Company officials say the work of Ford's aerospace unit in assisting Arab states to set up a satellite communications network helped to restore ties and smoothed its way.

The Detroit-based automaker made a fresh start in Kuwait last November, forming a new dealership from scratch, and has since started selling through established outlets in Saudi Arabia, Bahrain and the United Arab Emirates (UAE).

Peter Benham, Ford's marketing manager in Kuwait, said sales were running at around 70 units a month — "much better than we thought."

The other three Gulf states, he said, had "staggering results," each selling initial stocks of 46 to 68 luxury cars in a couple of days.

A second Saudi outlet is planned and dealerships will be added this year in Oman and Qatar.

"We believe Ford has an extremely attractive range of cars and trucks to offer the Middle East customer and we plan to obtain our fair share of the Arab marketplace," said Jerry Henderson, Ford sales vice-president, before the UAE launch.

Ford enjoys the huge sales advantage to U.S. exporters resulting from the dollar's slide since 1985. But the Middle East market has shrunk, perhaps by 60 per cent in 1986 alone, Benham said.

Recession from diminished oil revenues is biting and the Iran-Iraq war has crippled two potentially rich markets.

Also, Ford's U.S. rival, General Motors (GM), is gearing up to boost its presence in the region.

GM got the go-ahead last June for a camaking joint-venture in Egypt, which company officials said would serve as a strategic regional base in the most populous Arab Nation. It is expected to start up later this year.

Ford, in targeting the thinly-populated Gulf states with the world's top incomes per capita, is aiming for quality sales at the expense of volume.

"On these kinds of cars, the Japanese aren't a factor... GM and the luxury (West) German cars would be the main rivals," said Ken Brown, a Ford spokesman in Detroit.

The LTD Crown Victoria, Mercury Grand Marquis and Lincoln Towncar series were shown at the launch and will be followed by the Mercury Sable and Taurus, among others.

Ford is initially selling only U.S.-made models, at prices ranging from around $19,000 to $36,000. Its dealers reckon they have an edge, since both the yen and mark have risen strongly against dollar-tied Gulf currencies.

"It's a very suitable (launch) time. It would not have come at a better time for Ford," said Naeem Shakir, of the Dubai-based Galadari Brothers trading group, Ford agents in the UAE.

Ford backers are counting on initial novelty appeal maturing into a firm attraction for prestige alternatives to GM models. West Germany's Mercedes-Benz, Audi and BMW and top-range Japanese saloons.

This may take time. "Even in the Gulf, buyers are cost-conscious now," said one dealer. Wealthy merchants who changed their car every year during the oil boom now keep them longer.

A big hurdle for Ford, say dealers for other manufacturers, is a growing sense of brand loyalty to their models, nurtured through years of after-sales service.

The yen had risen by 40 per cent against the dollar in 18 months and Japanese vehicle sales to the Middle East declined by 45 per cent between 1982 and 1985. Then, with exports of 400,000 vehicles, it clung to 70 per cent of a smaller market.

Full details of sales for 1986 are hard to get, but informal trade and diplomatic estimates suggest

Japan still had one-half or more of the market for new passenger cars, trucks and buses.

These estimates give U.S. and European manufacturers roughly one-fifth of the market each. South Korea, with its won currency closely aligned to the dollar, has emerged as a notable new competitor.

In Kuwait, for instance, Hyundai and other small or medium-sized South Korean makes came from nowhere in 1985 to take 10 per cent of last year's sales.

Prospects for significant expansion outside the western Gulf Arab states, by Ford or other manufacturers, appear remote.

In Tunisia, dominated by French firms Renault and Peugeot, strict import curbs imposed for the past two years because of balance of payments problems have hit foreign car makers.

Local assembly of cars, lorries and commercial vehicles fell by one-half last year and Renault's local assembly plant was forced to close last December for three months.

In Jordan, where Ford had 60 to 70 per cent of the market before the Arab boycott, a sharp rise in customs duties since 1981 dealt a blow to imports of big-engined U.S. cars. New registrations have fallen by over two-thirds.

In Iraq, newcomers have to contend with Mercedes-Benz as the top choice for state and party leaders while top-grade Japanese saloons have a unique role as awards to military officers for bravery.

Other army personnel can buy Volkswagen Passats under an oil-for-cars deal with VW's Brazilian line involving 150,000 vehicles, but the average customer has to wait years for a car.

Tourism takes over from oil as Tunisia's top cash earner

By Charles Dick
Reuters

TUNIS — For the first time since the 1970s oil price boom, tourism has taken over from Tunisia's dwindling petroleum industry as the country's biggest money earner.

Income from visitors actually fell last year over 1985, but oil revenue fell faster, according to official figures.

With fine beaches, a long Mediterranean summer season and impressive relics of the ancient civilisations of Carthage and Rome, Tunisia had invested heavily in tourism.

But the sector is notoriously fickle and can be turned around rapidly by exchange rate fluctuations.

Hijackings and international conflicts can also scare off tourists. Two recent examples of this were Israel's 1985 air attacks on the Palestine Liberation Organisation's headquarters outside Tunis and the hijacking of the Italian cruise liner Achille Lauro in the Mediterranean.

Foreign currency receipts from tourism totalled $470 million in 1986 and Finance Minister Ismail Khelil predicts they will rise to $570 million this year. The figure for 1985 at the exchange rates prevailing then was $555 million.

By contrast, oil, where world prices have fallen and Tunisia's reserves are falling, brought in $390 million last year, a drop of almost 50 per cent on 1985. It is expected to fall again to around $370 million this year, according to 1987 budget figures.

Tunisia has effectively suspending its membership of the Organisation of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries (OAPEC), after less than five years in the group, and is preparing to become a net importer of oil by around 1990.

The country produces around 100,000 barrels a day, but it has to import nearly 50 per cent of the oil and petroleum products it needs, because it requires grades not found locally and because capacity is limited at the country's only refinery, in the northern port of Bizerte.

The government says this year's outlook for tourism is bright, with figures expected to continue upwards after picking up in the latter half of 1986.

Heavy rains also mean that this year's grain crop outlook is good after a poor performance in 1986.

In another major shift affecting the economy, Tunisia has come under an International Monetary Fund (IMF) programme for the first time after borrowing $250 million in November during an acute balance of payments crisis.

Total foreign debts are due to equal about 60 per cent of gross national product this year.

The economy recovery programme included a 10 per cent devaluation of the dinar last year and sets out guidelines for a liberalisation of import duties and prices.

The government has continued to reduce subsidies on basic foodstuffs such as bread, olive oil and sugar, which Western economic analysts say has pushed the inflation rate to more than 15 per cent in recent months. The official rate was 7.8 per cent in 1985.

Fading Bolivian city shines once a year with dancing devils

By Kevin Noblet
The Associated Press

ORURO, Bolivia — The fearsome, frog-eyed devil is again loose on the streets of this sky-high Bolivian city.

The populace shrieks with delight, the city fathers burst with pride, the tourists flock in, the peasants get drunk and the police grow vexed.

It is the pre-lenten season of carnival, when in many cities and towns across the Latin world workaday reality gives way to an orgy of costumed dance, parade and drink.

For Oruro, a fading trade and mining centre of 70,000 inhabitants, it is a rare chance to shine. For no one does carnival quite like here, 3,720 metres above sea level on the desolate "Altiplano," or high plain.

While the carnivals of Rio de Janeiro and New Orleans may be larger in scale, the celebration in Oruro sticks to its mystical, religious origins.

In a three-day spectacle starting the Saturday before lent, participants dance along a nine kilometre-route that winds through the narrow, dusty streets accompanied by brass bands in frayed pin-stripe suits playing a unique mixture of marching music and Indian tunes.

Best known are the "diablos," or devils, with their towering and elaborate masks of many colours. Their bloodshot eyes are the size of grapefruits, their tongues are serpents. Long, curving horns rise out of a head of hair made up of twisting snakes and lizards.

It was the latest in a series of economic blows to Oruro, which as a centre for rail traffic to the Pacific once was Bolivia's most important city. Now newer rail lines connect the landlocked country's capital, La Paz, with the coast and, along with the mining slump, have left Oruro in decline.

The slump makes carnival all the more important. An estimated 40,000 tourists, including 5,000 foreigners with lots of money to spend, pour into the city for the spectacle.

"This tourism is very, very important for Oruro," said Col. Carlos Casasola, police commander for the Oruro area. "The dollars are badly needed."

Shoulder to shoulder with local citizens, the tourists watch the dancing from cramped wooden stands along the parade route. Sitting under a scorching noonday sun, they shake their thirst on Bolivian beer, a sure recipe for rowdiness that makes Casasola's job a tough one.

"The behaviour of the crowd is not good. They don't obey the police," he complained, gesturing toward a large group of spectators who were sitting illegally on the street, in front of others who had paid for their narrow seats in the stands.

"We cannot remove them by force. It would make a bad appearance, and be bad for tourism," he said.

"We have great stamina," boasted Roberto Rodriguez, a 33-year-old Oruro native who works as a machanic when he isn't dancing as a devil. He said trial runs are held each Sunday for four months before the event.

"We don't have any problems because we practice so much," Rodriguez said.

As he spoke, in mid-parade, his face remained hidden by his terrible mask. "Sorry, but I can't take it off. It's part of the promise," he said.

Each participant vows to dance the entire course for three consecutive years. If a year is missed because of illness or accident, they must begin again.

The promise is made to the Virgin of the Mine Entrance, whose image is guarded in a chapel at the opening to the San Jose mine, a once-rich but now largely spent mountain of tin ore that rises over the city.

Last August, production at the mine was suspended along with that of several others in nearby towns as the debt-ridden federal government tried to cut spending. The mines were state-owned, but were several nearby smelting plants that also were shut down, and some 20,000 people lost their jobs.

Best known are the "diablos," or devils, with their towering and elaborate masks of many colours. Their bloodshot eyes are the size of grapefruits, their tongues are serpents. Long, curving horns rise out of a head of hair made up of twisting snakes and lizards.

It was the latest in a series of economic blows to Oruro, which as a centre for rail traffic to the Pacific once was Bolivia's most important city. Now newer rail lines connect the landlocked country's capital, La Paz, with the coast and, along with the mining slump, have left Oruro in decline.

The slump makes carnival all the more important. An estimated 40,000 tourists, including 5,000 foreigners with lots of money to spend, pour into the city for the spectacle.

"This tourism is very, very important for Oruro," said Col. Carlos Casasola, police commander for the Oruro area. "The dollars are badly needed."

Shoulder to shoulder with local citizens, the tourists watch the dancing from cramped wooden stands along the parade route. Sitting under a scorching noonday sun, they shake their thirst on Bolivian beer, a sure recipe for rowdiness that makes Casasola's job a tough one.

"The behaviour of the crowd is not good. They don't obey the police," he complained, gesturing toward a large group of spectators who were sitting illegally on the street, in front of others who had paid for their narrow seats in the stands.

"We cannot remove them by force. It would make a bad appearance, and be bad for tourism," he said.

"We have great stamina," boasted Roberto Rodriguez, a 33-year-old Oruro native who works as a machanic when he isn't dancing as a devil. He said trial runs are held each Sunday for four months before the event.

"We don't have any problems because we practice so much," Rodriguez said.

Eurotunnel vision marks a modest occasion

Plans for a tunnel between Britain and France have not gone smoothly in the past year. Will the company face less choppy waters in the second year of operation? Andrew Taylor examines the problems facing the Channel link.

LONDON — A small party has been held in London and Paris to celebrate the first anniversary of the decision by the British and French governments to give the go-ahead to plans to link their countries by a 31-mile rail tunnel under the Channel.

The celebrations organised by Eurotunnel, the Anglo-French consortium of bankers, construction and engineering groups which won the concession to build the tunnel, were considered to be much more subdued than the flag-waving jamboree in Lille last year when Mrs. Thatcher and President Mitterrand announced their decision.

The consortium still has much to do if one of the world's greatest construction ventures is to go ahead. The next 190 days or so will be crucial for Eurotunnel. It plans to complete the financing arrangements for the tunnel's construction with a £750 million ($1.15 billion) international share issue in July.

If that fails, loans and standby credits worth more than £5 billion with about 40 international banks might be in jeopardy.

Before the issue can take place, parliament will have to have passed the Channel Tunnel Bill and ratified the treaty signed with France last February.

A similar process will have to be completed in France, where opposition to the project is much less intense than in Britain.

There, ferry companies, environmentalists and people living in Kent have mounted a vociferous campaign opposing the tunnel.

Any slippage in the tight timetable might delay the start of main construction, planned for this autumn. The project could be lost altogether if parliament fails to pass the Channel Tunnel Bill or if the consortium fails to raise the cash it needs this summer.

A third factor which might upset the plans is the timing of the British general election. At best, an early election would put the bill on hold while the campaign is fought. A Conservative victory would leave the project intact, but any other outcome might jeopardise the tunnel — particularly if a Labour government adheres to its plan to hold a public inquiry into the proposals.

It is those matters on which Eurotunnel will be concentrating as it celebrated its first birthday on January 20. Most important of all, for the consortium, will be to kindle investment enthusiasm for the project. By its own admission, that has still to come afloat.

It has been a bruising 12 months for the consortium, which is still recovering from blows last October when plans to raise £206 million from international institutions very nearly ran aground.

The issue was saved only when the original founding banking and construction shareholders subscribed for extra shares. Eurotunnel recognises that it will have to fight a much more vigorous campaign if this summer's issue, taking the total equity raised to £1 billion, is not to run into similar difficulties.

It plans to offer the shares for the first time to the general public in Britain and France, after which it will seek a quote for the shares on the London and Paris stock exchanges.

The factors which shook investor confidence in October were the lack of a market for the consortium's shares; the fact that its management team was still being assembled; and the political uncertainty surrounding the project. The consortium argues that those will be absent when it comes to raise the final £750 million.

It is also looking at possibilities of issuing different types of equity to overcome objections from investment institutions concerned that first dividends will be paid until after the tunnel opens in 1993. One option may be to offer a convertible loan stock.

The likely constitution of underwriting syndicates for the issue is also being considered while Eurotunnel, according to its own timetable, must also shortly conclude detailed loan and standby credit agreements with its bankers.

Above all, Eurotunnel recognises that it must become more visible if it is to succeed. By its own admission, the consortium's publicity campaign over the past 12 months has not been as effective as it might have been against criticisms of the safety and viability of the scheme.

A £10 million advertising contract has been awarded to the advertising agency Collett Dickenson Pearce by Eurotunnel, which expects shortly to launch television advertisement in Britain to support its publicity campaign for the issue.

British journalists have been taken to Switzerland by Eurotunnel to see a series of privately run rail tunnels which have been successfully carrying passengers in their cars through tunnels up to 20 km long for more than 30 years.

The trip was aimed at countering criticisms raised in parliament by members and others that Eurotunnel's plans to carry passengers in the same carriages as their cars in unsafe.

A key figure in Eurotunnel's campaign is Sir Nigel Brookes, chairman of Trafalgar House, the shipping, construction, property and hotels group, who joined Eurotunnel as a non-executive director last October.

Sir Nigel was the driving force behind EuroRoute, a rival consortium with plans to cross the Channel by a combination of bridges and tunnels.

Sir Nigel is being tipped as a possible successor to Lord Pennox, 66, British joint-chairman of Eurotunnel. He is seen as the charismatic type of figure needed to head the consortium's drive to improve its image as it starts its second year in business. Sir Nigel's influence is already being felt as Eurotunnel gears up for the next few vital months — Financial Times feature.

Yugoslav prodigy violinist hailed as new Paganini

By Vjekoslav Radovic
Reuters

BELGRADE — Like many other 10-year-old boys, Stefan Milenkovic likes kicking a football or playing with toy guns. He also likes getting standing ovations.

When Stefan takes to the stage audiences around the world rise to their feet, hailing him as the next Paganini, the great 19th-century Italian violinist.

"It's a dream come true," says his father Zoran, 39, who has been coaching Stefan on the violin since the boy was three years old.

Stefan was born into a musical family in the quiet Belgrade suburb of Zemun. By his 10th birthday in January, he had played 400 concerts to enraptured audiences in the United States, the Soviet Union, Italy, Spain, Switzerland, Belgium, Czechoslovakia and Austria.

This year his busy touring schedule takes him to Japan and Argentina, Zoran Milenkovic, a violin teacher by profession, told Reuters.

"He started to toy with the violin at the age of two and a year later, with my training, he had his first appearance on Belgrade Television," his father said.

He was featured on magazine covers all over Europe, won standing ovations in the famous Milan Conservatory of Music, Madrid's Teatro Real and other famous concert halls where audiences crowded in to hear "the boy prodigy from the east," as he was called by the Italian magazine Domenica Del Corriere.

In the modest Milenkovic apartment in Zemun, Stefan appears to be like any other boy, as he plays with toy guns, "shooting" at his seven-year-old brother, Filip.

Although he is a dedicated and excellent music pupil, his pianist mother Lidija said, he still finds time to play soccer with his schoolmates. But his face returns to deep thought and concentration when he takes up his violin.

There is a long tradition of music in the family. Mrs. Milenkovic said her Italian father came to Yugoslavia in World War II, playing the clarinet for occupying Italian forces.

He fell in love with a Yugoslav girl and never returned to Italy. Stefan met his Italian relatives for the first time on his Italian tour last October.

When Stefan's parents became aware of his talent, the violin ceased to be a toy and his father began to work with him seriously for ten minutes a day.

"I increased the drill by five minutes every three months. Now he practises 140 minutes a day and will eventually go up to 160 minutes."

Stefan said he had no favourites in his repertoire: "It's all the same to me — I like them all — Paganini, Mozart, Brahms or Tchaikovsky."

Success has changed many things in the life of the family. They will soon move to a bigger apartment in the centre of town.

JORDAN MARKET PLACE

Holiday Inn
COMING TO THE RANCH STEAK HOUSE
FOR IMPORTED AMERICAN STEAKS
For Reservation call: 683100

ORFU GREEK TAVERNA
The First and Only Greek Restaurant in Jordan
TODAY
AND EVERY NIGHT
Live Music
ZORBA THE GREEK
LOCATED JABAL AMMAN 2ND CIRCLE
OPP. FRENCH LOAF
TEL. 641955 NO COVER CHARGE

RESTAURANT CHINA
The first & best Chinese Restaurant in Jordan
1st Circle, Jabal Amman, near Ahlyah Girls School
Take away is available
Open daily 12:00-3:30 p.m.
6:30-Midnight
Tel. 638968

慕堂餐廳 MANDARIN Chinese Restaurant
The only typical Chinese cuisine in Amman.
Chinese Flaming pot is available
Take away available
Open daily 12:00-15:30 18:00-23:30
Wadi Saqra Road - near Traffic Bridge
Amman, Jordan
Tel: 661922

CHINESE RESTAURANT TAIWAN TOURISMO
Authentic Chinese Food
Korean Bar-B-Q
Charcoal Flaming Pot
Take-away service
Open daily Noon - 3:30 p.m. & 6:30 p.m. - midnight
Location: Near 3rd Circle opposite Akilah Hospital
Tel: 641093

CHEN'S CHINESE RESTAURANT
Mecca Street, Yarmouk Engineers' Housing Estate, near Kilo Supermarket
Mongolian Barbecue for lunch and dinner Friday
Tel: 818214
Come and taste our specialities
Open daily 12:00 - 3:30 p.m.
6:30 - Midnight

The Ideal Residence for Expatriates & Businessmen
DAROTEL
Tel: 668193 - Telex 23888 DAROTL
Shmeisani - Amman
Furnished Studio Apartments
In Safe & Good Taste
HOTEL & APARTHOTEL RESTAURANT

EVERY DAY
PEOPLE WHO NEED MAINTENANCE SERVICES
CALL US!
Electrolux
P.O. Box 925229 AMMAN
Tel. 604671

CROWN INTERNATIONAL ESTABLISHMENT packing, shipping, forwarding, international moving, storage, clearing, door-to-door service Agents all over the world
Tel: 640001, 660052
The JORDAN BUSINESS CO.
Cairo: Nusebah, P.O. Box 235497
AMMAN - JORDAN

SHAKHSHIR Rent A Car
25% Discount
1. Short and long terms
2. Full insurance
3. Automatic and Air-condition cars
4. Always new cars with good service
Middle East Hotel
Tel: 648958

GREEN PARADISE RESTAURANT
Jabal Amman 3rd Circle
• Live music during lunch & dinner
• Oriental & French cuisine
For reservations, tel. 644023

Liverpool takes league lead

LONDON (R) — Liverpool, who led the English First Division for a brief seven-day spell in January, went top for only the second time this season when it took its revenge on FA Cup conqueror Luton.

A 2-0 victory at Anfield, courtesy of a Jan Molby penalty and an own goal by Luton defender Mal Donaghy, lifted Liverpool three points ahead of fellow citizens Everton.

But Liverpool's grip on first place could be even shorter this time, however, because Everton will go above it again on goal difference if it wins at Watford Sunday.

Third-placed Arsenal, chasing a unique trophy treble, suffered an understandable reaction in its four-hour League Cup semifinal victory over Tottenham last week at London neighbour Chelsea, where it lost 1-0.

Chelsea had eight first-team squad members unavailable through injury, illness and suspension and was forced to recall striker Colin West, who has been on loan with Scottish First Division club Partick Thistle.

West, 19 years old and only 1.65 metres tall, made an immediate impact on his debut by scoring the winner after five minutes when he seized on a rare David O'Leary error and tucked a firm shot neatly past Arsenal goalkeeper John Lukic.

FA Cup quarter-final Arsenal, now four points adrift with a game in hand, seldom threatened the Chelsea goal through midfielder David Rocastle, who scored its extra time winner in the League Cup semifinal replay with Tottenham, was unfortunate to hit the post shortly before half-time.

While Arsenal is beginning to show the first signs of fatigue after an arduous season, Liverpool, its League Cup final opponents on April 5, appears to be hitting top form at exactly the right time.

Player-manager Kenny Dalglish left himself no sidelines and recent £800,000 (£1.2 million) signing John Aldridge on the substitute's bench, despite the fact the former Oxford striker scored the winner against Southampton last week.

With Molby, Steve McMahon and Craig Johnston taking a firm grip on midfield, Liverpool dominated proceedings from the start and went in front after 18 minutes when Luton defender Roh Johnson handled the ball during a frantic goalmouth melee.

Molby converted the resultant penalty with typical nonchalance and Liverpool increased its advantage five minutes from halftime when Donaghy had the misfortune to turn the ball past his own goalkeeper during another Liverpool surge.

Tottenham bounced back from the League Cup disappointment with a gritty 1-0 home win over Queen's Park Rangers which left it eight points adrift of Liverpool but with two games in hand.

Almost inevitably, Clive Allen scored the winner with a 59th minute penalty, his 40th goal of an extraordinary year which should see him overtake Jimmy Greaves as Tottenham's top scorer in a single season.

Glasgow Rangers remained top of the Scottish Premier League on goal difference, despite running up against some unexpected resistance at lowly Falkirk, where it won 2-1 thanks to two first half goals from striker Ally McCoist.

Glasgow Celtic maintained its challenge in second place by beating Motherwell 3-1 at home. Scotland World Cup midfielder Roy Aitken put Celtic ahead and further goals from Brian McClair and Tony Shepherd sealed Motherwell's fate.

Third-placed Dundee United, who beat Barcelona in the UEFA Cup in midweek, slipped three points behind Rangers but with a game in hand when it was held to a 1-1 draw at home by Clydebank.

Rain cools tempers, halts wild Lendl-Connors match

KEY BISCAYNE, Florida (AP)

— In a repeat of their wild semifinal last year, Ivan Lendl and Jimmy Connors played more than three hours of raucous tennis before rain halted the match at the start of a third-set tiebreaker in the International Players Championships.

Connors won the first set 6-3 and Lendl took the second 7-6 with a 9-7 victory in the tiebreaker. The rain came just in time to cool tempers, which were getting out of control.

Lendl constantly complained about the wind, which was gusting to at least 35 mph (56 kph), and got a code of conduct warning from the chair umpire Richard Kaufman while asking for the match to be halted because a few raindrops fell in the middle of the third set.

Later in that set, Connors was hit in the throat by a ball which bounced off the net. When Kaufman gave him a time violation for taking too long to make his next serve, Connors erupted and got a code of conduct warning for his language.

Connors, who led 30-15 after he was hit by the ball, went on to lose that game and fall down 6-5 in games. But he broke Lendl's serve with a sharp crosscourt backhand to force the tiebreaker.

Jimmy Connors

Kaufman then stopped the match because the rain was beginning to fall more heavily. Last year in the semifinals, Connors walked off the court in the fifth set to protest line calls. Connors, who was trailing 5-2 when he quit, was suspended 10 weeks and fined $25,000 for his behavior.

In other men's semifinal, fourth-seeded Yannick Noah was scheduled to play ninth-seeded Miloslav Mecir.

But Noah's status is in ques-

Ivan Lendl

tion. He pulled out of a doubles match Thursday because of a shoulder injury suffered in his quarterfinal victory over Mats Wilander. A release from the Association of Tennis Professionals said Noah hopes his sprained right shoulder will respond to treatment and he will attempt to play.

Second-seeded Chris Evert Lloyd and third-seeded Steffi Graf are scheduled to play in the women's final Saturday.

Gavaskar becomes first to score 10,000 test runs

AHMEDABAD, India (R) — Sunil Gavaskar, the "little master" of Indian cricket, Saturday became the first batsman to score 10,000 runs in test cricket.

Gavaskar, on 57 after tea on the third day of the fourth test against Pakistan, needed one run to reach five figures when he cut Ejaz Fakir for two, triggering a mass pitch invasion.

Play was held up for several minutes as spectators raced on to the ground to congratulate Gavaskar and thousands of others gave him a lengthy standing ovation. A child garlanded the Bombay batsman.

Gavaskar, who has hit a record 34 test centuries, said of the unique landmark: "It was just a moment of sheer joy for me."

He said he did not mentally prepare himself for creating test history and had batted as in any other match.

Gavaskar, now 37, made his test debut on the 1970-71 tour of West Indies. "When I started playing test cricket my aim was not to make a fool of myself," he said.

Four centuries and a total of 774 runs in the four-match series proved India had found a batsman of rare talents who has so far notched up 124 test appearances. Gavaskar has said he will retire soon, probably at the end of the year.

The former Indian captain is one of the richest cricket players in the country. Apart from playing cricket and working in a private company, he endorses products and modelling photographs appear almost daily in the Indian media.

England's Geoff Boycott holds second place in the list of all-time test run scorers with 8,114. West Indian Gary Sobers is third with 8,032.

Australian captain Allan Border, West Indian captain Viv Richards and England's David Gower are the current players nearest to Gavaskar's record with around 6,000 runs.

SPORTS IN BRIEF

Kuwait qualifies for Olympics

DOHA, (R) — Kuwait beat Iran 1-0 (0-0) Saturday to qualify for next year's Olympic Games' soccer tournament in Seoul. Scorer: Faisal Al Dakhil (87th minute).

Istanbul-Kiev match rescheduled

ISTANBUL (R) — Besiktas of Istanbul and Dynamo Kiev of the Soviet Union have rescheduled the first leg of their European Cup quarter final soccer tie for Istanbul on March 14, the Turkish club said. The match was postponed last Wednesday and then again Thursday and Friday because of snow in Istanbul. A Besiktas spokesman told Reuters the decision was approved by both clubs and by European soccer union (UEFA) officials. The match will start at 12:30 GMT and the second leg will be played in Kiev on March 15.

Argentine coach's gun was a toy

BUENOS AIRES (R) — A gun former Argentine national team coach Cesar Menotti pulled on soccer fans who attacked him Thursday was a toy pistol, a judge said. "I received a police report today clarifying that the gun was a toy," La Plata Judge Horacio Piombo said Friday. Police found the gun in the visitors' changing rooms at Estudiantes Stadium, he said. Witnesses said Menotti took a gun from a bag and pointed it at a group of Estudiantes De La Plata fans who attacked and insulted him and his Boca Juniors players as they arrived to complete a First Division match that was suspended last November because of crowd trouble.

Tigana's lucky number provokes fine

PARIS (R) — Jean Tigana's affection for his lucky number 14 shirt has cost the French Football Federation a 5,000 Swiss franc ($3,300) fine, the federation said. Tigana has carried number 14 since the 1982 World Cup but ran into trouble last November before the European Championship qualifying match against East Germany in Leipzig. The referee told Tigana the rulebook stated players should be numbered 1-11 and the kick-off was held up while the French midfielder argued his case. The game ended 0-0.

Italian captain to undergo surgery

TURIN, Italy (R) — Italian captain Antonin Cabrin undergoes a knee operation next week which will put him out of soccer for at least four months, officials at his Juventus club said Saturday. Defender Cabrin, 29, decided on the operation after doctors said he had aggravated a ligament injury to his left knee in a league match against Fiorentina last Sunday. Reigning Champion Juventus moved into second place in the league with last weekend's win, four points behind Napoli, with 10 weeks of the season to play.

Soviet sets superheavyweight mark

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet superheavyweight Leonid Taranenko set a world record by lifting a total of 467.5 kilograms in two separate efforts, the TASS news agency said. TASS said the 30-year-old Taranenko snatched 205 kilograms and jerked 262.5 kilograms to set the record Friday. It said his effort was 2.5 kilograms better than the previous record, held by Soviet Alexander Gulyashev.

American NBA roundup

Johnson helps Pistons over Mavericks

DETROIT (AP) — Vinnie Johnson helped the Pistons survive a disastrous first half to defeat the Dallas Mavericks 125-115 in a battle of division leaders in the National Basketball Association.

Johnson's teammates were 12-of-37 from the field in the first two periods against the Mavericks, but Johnson was 10-for-15 off the bench to keep the Pistons within 11 points at halftime.

Johnson finished with 28 points, while Bill Laimbeer had 24 points and 18 rebounds. Adrian Dantley scored 23 points and Isiah Thomas 22.

Elsewhere in the NBA, it was Boston 132, Los Angeles Clippers 111; Atlanta 111, New Jersey 83; Philadelphia 123, Washington 113; Utah 124, Milwaukee 123; New York 110, Chicago 109; and San Antonio 130, Sacramento 119.

Boston, despite missing Larry Bird because of a sprained back, easily handled Los Angeles as Kevin McHale hit 16 of 20 field-goal attempts and scored 35 points.

Fred Roberts, starting in place of Bird, contributed 17 points, while Danny Ainge scored 20, Robert Parish had 18 and Dennis Johnson added a season-high 16 assists. None of the five starters played in the fourth period as the Celtics took a 105-79 lead into the final quarter.

Philadelphia's Cliff Robinson, playing in his first game since Feb. 23 because of an eye infection, had no trouble finding the basket as he scored 26 points against the Bulls.

It was the first victory for the 76ers over Washington in four games this season as they finally found a way to contain former teammate Moses Malone, who had 34 points and 49 rebounds in the three previous meetings between the two teams.

Atlanta won its fifth straight game as Dominique Wilkins scored 10 of his 17 points in the first quarter, giving the Hawks the lead for good against New Jersey.

In Milwaukee, John Stockton scored 10 of his 14 points in the fourth quarter, including a turnaround jumper with nine seconds left, as Utah rallied from a 19-point deficit to win at Milwaukee for the first time in eight tries since Dec. 30, 1979.

Milwaukee was led by Jack Sikma's 20 points and 15 rebounds.

In Chicago, Patrick Ewing scored 31 points, including a 12-foot jumper with 10 seconds remaining, and Gerald Wilkins scored 33 points, lifting New York over Chicago for its third straight victory.

Michael Jordan finished with 27 points, 10 under his average, and eight steals.

In San Antonio, Alvin Robertson and Mike Mitchell scored 27 points apiece for San Antonio against Sacramento. The Spurs clinched the victory by scoring their final six points from the free-throw line.

FURNISHED FLATS FOR RENT

Fully-furnished one bedroom and two bedroom flats, w/w carpet, colour T.V., central heating, telephone. Two locations. Jabal Amman, near Fifth Circle and Abdali area.

Phone: 673768, 672842 after 2 p.m.

POSITION REQUIRED

A 36 year-old Jordanian holding a B.A. in English and with three years experience in teaching English and eleven years in translation is seeking a translation position or an appropriate position requiring fluency in Arabic and English.

Call: Ismael, tel. 784831, from 8.00 to 14.00

NURSES WANTED

We are seeking female and male nurses who are University of Jordan graduates with B.Sc. or diploma in nursing. Applicants should be of Jordanian nationality.

Call: 642135, Amman for three days

FOR RENT

Furnished apartment (ground floor) 2 bedrooms, salon, dining room, kitchen, bathroom, balcony, very good furniture in a nice location. Seventh Circle, airport road. Telephone, services, central heating, garage and nice garden.

Tel: 810523 - 810522

SECRETARY WANTED

Personal Secretary of German or British nationality, married to a Jordanian national. German and English languages essential. Experienced in typing (electric typewriter) word processor and telex.

Please send details of past experience and C.V. to P.O.B. 6823, Amman, Jordan.

Applicants will be interviewed during week commencing March 14th.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

A third-floor apartment consisting of three spacious bedrooms, two bathrooms, three lounges, large kitchen, large glassed-in veranda with central heating. Apartment area: 210 sq.m. Annual rent: JD 1,800. Location: Jabal Amman - 4th Circle - near Randa Pharmacy and Corner supermarket.

Call: 655403 - 673925, Amman

FOR RENT FURNISHED FLAT NEAR 5TH CIRCLE

2 bedrooms, 2 bathrooms, sitting-room, dining room & kitchen with American appliances (fridge, cooker & washing machines). Fully carpeted, centrally heated. Own telephone, garden, garage & entrance.

Call: 673166

Cinema Tel: 677420

CONCORD

MIAMI SUPER COPS

Performances 7:30, 8:00, 8:30, 10:30

Cinema Tel: 625155

RAINBOW

FALLING IN LOVE

Performances 7:15, 8:30, 8:50, 10:30

Cinema Tel: 675573

OPERA

BAND OF THE HAND

Performances 7:30, 8:15, 8:30, 10:30

Cinema Tel: 677420

PLAZA

HEARTBURN

Performances 7:30, 8:00, 8:30, 10:30

Cinema Tel: 622198

RAGHADAN

BAND OF THE HAND

Performances 12:15, 3:00, 5:00, 9:45

FORUM HOTELS INTERNATIONAL
A Division of Intercontinental Hotels Corporation

Amra Hotel

Friday & Sunday
Lunch Buffet
JD 5.500

And from 5:pm to 7:30pm
we offer a choice of rich Pastries, Cakes and Pies including Coffee or Tea for 0.600 Jds
at the Al-Azrak coffee shop

You find
45 SPECIALITIES and VARIETIES of DISHES on our
LUNCH BUFFET
at
JD 4.500

Police enter Golden Temple to rescue 4 injured colleagues

CHANDIGARH, India (R) — Hundreds of armed police entered the Golden Temple in Amritsar Saturday to rescue four plainclothes colleagues wounded in a gunbattle with Sikh extremist youths inside the shrine, police here said.

It was the first time uniformed security forces had entered Sikhdom's holiest shrine since last June when sword-wielding militants demanding an independent Sikh homeland stabbed a temple guard to death.

About 300 police and paramilitary security forces with rifles and automatic weapons stormed into the sacred complex to bring out the wounded men, police in Chandigarh, capital of India's troubled northern Punjab state, said.

They said trouble began when militant Sikh students seized an off-duty policeman who went to pay his respects to Darshan Singh, chief priest of the Akal Takht, a building in the complex considered the seat of spiritual authority for Sikhs.

The four plainclothes police were trying to rescue a man they heard was being tortured by members of the All-India Sikh Students Federation (AISSF) in a room beside the marble esplanade surrounding the temple's sacred pool.

Earlier, police sources said the man being tortured was thought to be a police informer.

All four were wounded when they were fired on as they approached the room, police said. Two Sikh students were also wounded and police outside the temple gathered to storm in and rescue their colleagues.

The police also sealed off the entire area around the temple complex, put "no entry" signs on all gates and closed shops and markets nearby.

Police outraged many Sikhs by raiding the complex several times last year to hunt extremists and attempt to prevent militants opposed to moderate Punjab Chief Minister Surjit Singh Barnala taking control of the shrine.

Militants now control the temple and senior priests last month excommunicated Mr. Barnala from the Sikh religion for refusing to obey their edicts.

A suspected extremist was killed when police entered the temple in April — the first raid since a full-scale army assault in June 1984 crushed armed Sikhs occupying the complex. At least 1,000 people died in the assault.

Control of the shrine is key to Sikh politics. Mr. Barnala is fighting to keep his minority government in office in the face of edicts from temple priests to disband his ruling faction of the Akali Dal Party and make way for more militant leaders.

In another incident in Punjab, suspected extremists killed a Sikh man Friday near Faridkot, hurling the unofficial death toll in extremist-related violence in the northern Indian state this month to 30.

According to unofficial counts 145 people have been killed in Punjab this year.

Rebels bomb dozen banks, kill Peruvian police official

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Leftist guerrillas bombed more than a dozen branch banks in the capital, and members of another rebel group killed a police official in the Andean city of Huancayo, police said.

Members of the Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement attacked 11 branch offices of Banco de Credito, Peru's largest private bank, and two offices of Banco de la Nación, the largest state-run bank, police said Friday.

They said the pro-Cuban guerrillas left the group's initials painted on some of the banks' walls, police said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The attacks began at 10:30 p.m. (0330 GMT), when a loud blast was heard in central Lima. Other police sources said offices of Banco de Credito, Banco Popular and Banco Latino in the working-class neighbourhood of Rimac were bombed. But this could not be confirmed and it was unclear if the two reports included information on the same attacks.

There was no immediate word on injuries or the extent of damages, police said.

Channel 9 television said late Friday that a bank in the working-class neighbourhood of La Victoria, about five kilometres from downtown, and a bank in Lima's neighbouring port city Callao also were bombed.

These reports also were not immediately confirmed.

Meanwhile, police said Maj. Emilio Antonio Chumbe, head of Huancayo's criminal investigation unit, was shot to death earlier in the day while he was walking near his home in the city, a trading centre of about 200,000 people some 225 kilometres east of Lima.

Police told the Associated Press that Maj. Chumbe, who formerly worked with anti-insurgency forces in Ayacucho state where the Shining Path began its battle against the government, was killed by a four-man rebel assassination team.

Ramos warns of growing rebel terror campaign

MANILA (R) — Philippine Armed Forces Chief Fidel Ramos has warned of growing Communist guerrilla violence in the run up to congressional elections in May in an effort to "terrorise" voters into supporting their candidates.

He told a meeting of businessmen Friday night rebel-related violence had been increasing since last month and the "rising trend... will probably continue to be sustained up to the time of the congressional elections in May."

Gen. Ramos added: "Perhaps this could be an effort on the part of the rebels to terrorise the people into supporting the Communist-backed candidates."

The banned Communist Party cannot itself field candidates, though a party official has told Reuters it will support those candidates with "a track record of support for the people."

Meanwhile, the military reported nine soldiers were killed in an ambush Friday afternoon by suspected Communist rebels on the central Philippine island of Panay.

The civilian pressure group Bayan said at least 31 people were killed after two military helicopters strafed an outlying district of the southern Philippine city of Davao a week ago.

The report could not be independently confirmed, though the military has reported that it has stepped up attacks on suspected Communist rebel strongholds around Davao, Mindanao Island's main city.

Gen. Ramos said at least nine people — an average of three soldiers, three rebels and three civilians — were being killed each day, which was an equivalent level to last year.

The Communists, who have been fighting the government since 1969, had suffered several setbacks, including the mistake of not giving support to the popular revolt that swept President Corason Aquino into power last year, Gen. Ramos said.

He said the rebels made another mistake when they campaigned against a new constitution ratified by the people last month. The charter calls for elections of a new congress in May and provincial governors and mayors in August.

"The government and a concerned citizenry can defeat the Communist insurgency if we will only endeavour to understand its nature, its dynamics and its character," Gen. Ramos said.

Former defence secretary doubts early SDI deployment

WASHINGTON (R) — The United States could not deploy a simple, "ground-based" "Star Wars" anti-missile defence until at least 1996 and any space-based system is unlikely in this century, former Defence Secretary Harold Brown has said.

Mr. Brown, a nuclear physicist, challenged recent predictions by Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger that initial deployment could come as early as 1993 and might include some esoteric space-based weaponry to destroy Soviet missiles in flight.

He also cautioned against inflating the potential of a space-based defence system.

"If you want to deploy something simple along the lines of a ground-based system, you could begin to deploy it probably in the 1996-1997 period," Mr. Brown told reporters at a breakfast meeting. "You could have it deployed by the year 2000."

"The simplest layer of space-based systems — kinetic kill vehicles — I don't see before the year 2000. It could not be fully deployed before 2010."

Mr. Brown, succeeded by Mr.

Weinberger after serving as Pentagon chief under Democratic President Jimmy Carter, said he remained pessimistic about the Strategic Defence Initiative (SDI), popularly called Star Wars, but believed Congress should continue to fund research on the project.

An early ground-based defence, according to military experts, could be used to protect U.S. nuclear missiles and would consist of small "kinetic kill" projectiles fired on a collision course with nuclear warheads descending to their targets.

More complicated space-based kinetic kill platforms, lasers and high-energy beams would be aimed at destroying Soviet intercontinental missiles on lift-off and in mid-flight.

Mr. Brown said results of tests he has seen to date would not produce systems cost-effective at the margin, meaning Moscow would have to spend less on modifying nuclear weapons to overwhelm new defences than Washington would spend on the defences.

Soviet applicants to know duration of visa restriction

MOSCOW (AP) — People denied permission to emigrate because they know state or military secrets may be told how long they must wait before they can qualify to leave, the head of Moscow's visa office says.

S. Alpatov also said in an interview published Friday in the newspaper Vechernyaya Moskva that 150 Moscow residents have been granted permission to leave the country since a new emigration law was enacted on Jan. 1.

Alpatov, head of the Moscow office of the visa office Ovir, said the most common reason people are refused permission to emigrate is that they know state or military secrets.

"We are now introducing such a practice that would allow us in some cases to let an applicant know the length of such a restriction," he said.

Many of those who have been refused permission to leave say they never have been given specific reasons. Others who have been told they know state or military secrets say the decisions are arbitrary.

Alexander Lerner, a Moscow resident who has been seeking permission for more than 15 years to go to Israel, said earlier this week that the official reason was cybernetics research he did 25 years ago.

It was not clear from Alpatov's statement whether the new policy would be carried out only in Moscow or across the country.

No figures were available to compare with previous months the number of Moscow residents allowed to leave in January and February.

Alpatov said Soviets still would be refused permission to leave the country if they were leaving behind elderly parents without a means of support, or if they sought to join family members who illegally left the country.

Thailand to buy tanks from China at discount

BANGKOK (R) — Thailand has agreed to buy at least 50 T-69 tanks from China in a sweetheart deal, Saturday's newspapers quoted a senior army operations officer as saying.

The Bangkok Post said deputy Chief of Staff Lieutenant General Suchinda Kraprayoon said Friday China would sell Bangkok 50 to 60 tanks at only 10 per cent of market price with a grace period for payment.

No army spokesman could be reached for comment Saturday.

The nation's newspaper quoted Gen. Suchinda as saying the deal was for 50 tanks at a yet to be settled "friendship" price.

The papers said the T-69 is a Chinese-built modified version of the Soviet T-54 and T-55 tanks.

The Thai Air Force said this week it expected to buy 37-mm anti-aircraft guns from China soon, also at a low price.

Thailand's armed forces rely mostly on U.S.-built equipment. The tank agreement would be its first major arms deal with China.

Ties between Bangkok and Peking have gotten very close in recent years, particularly as a result of collaboration over Kampuchea where Chinese-armed guerrillas are fighting Vietnamese troops opposite Thailand's borders.

Hess suffering from pneumonia

BERLIN (AP) — Rudolf Hess, 92, Adolf Hitler's former right-hand man and the last imprisoned Nazi leader, was in a British military hospital suffering from pneumonia, the family lawyer said.

Hess was taken out of Spandau Prison Sunday and transferred to a British military hospital for observation, said Andrew Purdon, spokesman for the British diplomatic mission in West Berlin.

"He was taken there simply because he said he wasn't feeling well," Purdon said Friday.

But Alfred Seidl, the Hess family lawyer, said in a telephone interview with the Associated

Survivors recount ordeal in sunken British ferry

ZEEBRUGGE, Belgium (R) — For the lucky ones, the wet, cold horror on board the doomed Herald of Free Enterprise ended with the smash of a rescuer's axe through a porthole.

It began, one survivor said early Saturday, with the tremble of glasses in the ship's main restaurant and then the whole boat "just started to lift and kept on going over."

The forlorn, shattered hand of bedraggled survivors in the Hotel Novotel just outside Zeebrugge spoke of their stunned disbelief Friday night as they found themselves suddenly with freezing water rising around them.

Just moments before, the 7,951-tonne ferry had set off from Zeebrugge in Belgium for Dover, taking in England about 540 people, virtually all Britons returning from a "supercheap" £1 day return trip to the continent.

Then as it was just pulling clear of the harbour, the vessel flooded — dramatically and mysteriously — and the nightmare began.

Andrew Simons, 30, a self-employed motor mechanic, was in the corridor with a friend, Clifford Byrne, when the lights of the ferry went out. "Water started rushing in and just rose up around me. None of us could believe it."

Simons, from Tooting Bec, London, said that once the boat had steadied on to its side he hauled himself along a banister into the lounge where he saw a man standing deep in water holding a baby girl.

"He was too cold to move."

Head of UNFPA dies

NEW YORK (USIA) — Rafael M. Salas, executive director of the U.N. Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) and an under secretary general of the U.N., died on March 4 at age of 58.

Salas, a leading authority on family planning, headed the agency since its creation in 1969. He guided UNFPA's growth from a small organisation with less than $2.5 million in resources and a staff of five into the largest source of international population assistance worldwide, with resources of almost $150 million and a staff of 270.

Salas was one of a few people who transformed the obscure field of family planning into an accepted component of development, helping planners overcome initial position to population control in underdeveloped, Roman Catholic and Marxist countries. When he became head of UNFPA only Sri Lanka and India had family planning programmes.

100 hurt in clashes among Bangladesh political rivals

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — At least 100 people were injured in a clash between two rival political parties outside Dhaka, witnesses said.

Police said two policemen and one fireman were among the injured Friday in the fight at the town of Adamajenagar between workers of the ruling Jatiya Party and the opposition Bangladesh Nationalist Party.

No arrests were made and the exact number of casualties was unavailable, police said.

Khaleda Zia, head of the Bangladesh Nationalist Party, was scheduled to address a meeting at Adamajenagar, 16 kilometres south of the capital, when the violence erupted, party sources said.

The Jatiya workers want to stop Khaleda Zia from campaigning against the autocratic government in Dhaka.

Ecuador adopts austerity measures after earthquake

QUITO (R) — Ecuador has adopted tough fuel conservation measures after oil production was paralysed by an earthquake in which six people died and 20 were injured.

Energy and Mines Minister Javier Espinosa said on television Friday night the country would cut domestic fuel sales by 30 per cent. It would also suspend foreign crude sales, the nation's main export earner.

The quake on Thursday, which registered six on the 12-point Mercalli scale, killed at least six people and was centred near the Reventador Volcano about 90 kilometres east of Quito, authorities said. At least 700 aftershocks struck Friday.

The quake paralysed oil production by damaging about 40 kilometres of Ecuador's main pipeline linking Amazon basin oil fields to the Pacific Ocean coast. Mr. Espinosa said.

Ecuador, a member of the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), has been recently pumping 260,000 barrels per day (BPD).

Deputy Energy Minister Fernando Santos Alvariz told an interviewer it could take more than a

COLUMNS 768

Man sheds one tenth of weight in operation

LOS ANGELES (R) — A 640-pound (290-kg) man lost nearly 60 pounds (27 kg) in an emergency intestinal bypass operation that removed a large amount of body fat. A hospital spokeswoman said Raymond Robles, 54, was expected to lose 150 more pounds (68 kg) during the next year after the rerouting of 18 inches (46 cm) of intestine as treatment for an eating disorder. Robles, cm) of intestine as treatment for an eating disorder. Robles, cm) of intestine as treatment for an eating disorder. Robles, cm) of intestine as treatment for an eating disorder.

For the past six months, the spokeswoman said. The former amateur tennis player, who is five feet 10 inches (1.7 metre) tall, was in stable but critical condition, she said.

Everest may not be tallest mountain

NEW YORK (R) — Mount Everest may not be the world's highest mountain, U.S. scientists were quoted as saying. The New York Times, citing a report by scientists at the University of Washington in Seattle, said new measuring techniques using a U.S. satellite indicate that K-2, another peak in the Himalayas, may be taller. But the scientists were unwilling to confirm K-2 was the world's tallest peak until they could also measure Everest using the same techniques. The accepted height for Everest is 29,028 feet (8,847 metres) and K-2 is listed at 28,250 feet (8,610 metres). However, a Washington University expedition which climbed K-2 last year established its height as 29,064 feet (8,858 metres), with the possibility that it could be as tall as 29,228 feet (8,908 metres). One of the scientists told the New York Times, however, that the height now accepted for Everest could also be wrong. "I wouldn't be surprised if we found Everest to be higher," Dr. George Wallerstein, a member of the expedition, said.

Man on death row freed after 13 years

TAMPA, Florida (AP) — A man who came within 24 hours of execution was freed after two witnesses who helped send him to death row 13 years ago recanted their trial testimony. Joseph Green Brown was released Thursday night after state prosecutors decided they couldn't win a murder retrial ordered by the courts. "The only proof we have is that there is no proof," prosecutor Chris Hoyer said. Brown was sentenced to die for the 1973 robbery, rape and murder of Earlene Evans Barksdale. The nude body of the 34-year-old woman was found in the back office of her children's clothing store. She had been shot in the head. In 1983, then-Governor Bob Graham signed a death warrant, and Brown was scheduled to die in the electric chair on the morning of Oct. 18. But less than 24 hours before, U.S. District Judge W. Terrell Hodges blocked the execution in response to an appeal citing 11 alleged violations to the U.S. constitution. Brown's argument in both state and federal appeals courts centred on a videotaped deposition of the state's key witness recanting his trial testimony. The 11th U.S. circuit court of appeals in Atlanta ruled in March 1986 that the state had made a secret, unfair deal with a witness to testify at Brown's trial. The witness, Ronald Floyd, now says he lied on the witness stand and was not with Brown when Mrs. Barksdale was slain, Hoyer said. A second witness who testified against Brown was interviewed and said he also lied, Hoyer said.

Ex-porn star undergoes liver transplant

PITTSBURGH (R) — Linda Lovelace, who starred in the X-rated movie Deep Throat, then went on to campaign against pornography, underwent a liver transplant, a hospital spokeswoman said. The operation at Pittsburgh's Presbyterian University hospital lasted almost 14 hours, spokeswoman Chris Shirer said. She said Lovelace, registered in her real name as Linda Marchiano, was listed in "critical" condition, which was normal for such surgery. Shirer quoted Chief Surgeon Wallace Marsh as saying the surgery "was not marked by any inordinate problems." She said Marchiano was being monitored in the intensive care unit for the next 48-72 hours. Marchiano, 37, who has appealed for donations towards the transplant since last year, had been living in the Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania area with her husband Larry in recent months and was notified that a suitable donor had been found, Shirer said. Marchiano was diagnosed last year as suffering from hepatitis, believed to have been contracted from a blood transfusion following a car crash several years ago.

New virus may cause 2nd AIDS epidemic

ATLANTA (R) — A new strain of AIDS virus discovered about a year ago could touch off a second epidemic of the disease in Africa, the Atlanta Journal has reported. The new virus, called HIV-2, appears to cause the same fatal damage to the immune system but is genetically unlike the previously known AIDS virus, the paper said. "The HIV-2 virus right now is confined mainly to West Africa, but the concern is that it will spread," Dr. Thomas Quinn of the Johns Hopkins School of Medicine in Baltimore told the newspaper. "The virus has the potential to cause a second epidemic." Dr. Harold Jaffe, chief of the epidemiology branch of the AIDS programme at the Atlanta-based U.S. Centres for Disease Control (CDC), said the new virus is closer to one known to infect monkeys, the Simian virus. Since there is no evidence the disease has reached the United States, CDC is doing only a small study of the virus, which was first reported by researchers of Institute Pasteur in Paris last year. Jaffe said one of the main problems will be finding a test which can identify the new virus in blood. There is some concern the present AIDS test may not pick up this virus, he added.

Faster blood screening system developed

TOKYO (R) — Japan has developed an automatic blood screening system for AIDS which can determine within one hour whether people are infected with the killer disease, the Japanese Red Cross society has said. The system uses a newly-developed chemical test which enables existing automatic blood testing machines to detect the Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) virus, officials of the society's Hokkaido blood-donor centre in northern Japan said. Tokyo-based Fuji Rebio, developers of the chemical test, in the system, said local marketing will begin next month. The current widely-used AIDS screening method Elisa (enzyme linked immuno assay) takes several hours and requires more staff. The society said the new system would cut the increasing work of checking for AIDS carriers if it was approved and introduced at its 75 blood-donor centres in Japan. Last November, the society started AIDS tests for all blood donors at its centres to reduce the risk of recipients contracting AIDS through blood transfusions.

Bikini-clad dancers banned from stage

PEKING (AP) — A music group whose shows featured dancers clad in bikinis has been banned from performing, the English-language China Daily reported Saturday. The group was banned after authorities in Guangzhou province issued rules last week forbidding women from performing in bikinis, the report said. The women were subsequently accused by a state-run local newspaper of "corrupting public morals." The group was headed by a former worker at the Canto machine factory, China Daily said. The national government recently issued a set of rules banning bikinis in all performances except body building contests. The move coincides with a conservative shift in Chinese politics and a campaign against "bourgeois liberalism" or advocating Western values at the expense of Chinese traditions.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN
AND OWAS SEARF
© 1986 Tribune Media Services, Inc.

WHOSE HAND?

North-South vulnerable. West deals.

NORTH
♠ 9 2
♥ 4
♦ J 5
♣ A K 10 9 5 3
EAST
♠ K 10 6 5 4
♥ Q J 8 7
♦ A K J 5
♣ Q 7 3 2
SOUTH
♠ A 3
♥ 10 9 6 2
♦ A K 10 7 4
♣ Q 4

The bidding:
West North East South
1 ♠ 3 ♠ 3 NT
Pass Pass 4 ♠ Pass
Pass 4 NT Pass Pass

Opening lead: King of ♠.

At duplicate bridge, if you think the opponents can't make their contract and are reasonably sure that your side can't bid any higher without suffering defeat, it is right to settle for the plus score. At rubber bridge or team play, however, it is usually correct to take out insurance by bidding one more—you are willing to risk a small loss to protect against a possible large swing against you.

This deal came up in the weekly team game held at New York's renowned Cavendish Club. North's jump overall was preemptive and East, Philip Alder, a recent immigrant to these shores who has joined the Goren organization, raised his partner competitively. After South, Rita Rand of New York, made the winning decision to bid three no trump, Alder decided he was likely to find his partner with some shortness in diamonds, so he took what he thought was a sacrifice at four spades.

As the cards lie, that contract was due to succeed—with trumps splitting evenly, the only losers would have been one trump, one diamond and one club. But North, Claire Tornay of New York, wisely elected to take out some insurance of her own by bidding four no trump.

North-South did have ten tricks available. Unfortunately, East-West were able to reel in four tricks first. West, Philip Martyn of New York, had a natural lead of the king of hearts and East signalled his encouragement with the seven. A low heart to the queen and a heart back sealed dealer's fate at the earliest opportunity.

Handwritten signature: J. J. ...